VICTORY! GRAND TRUNK COMES TO BOSTON!

HISTORY OF ONE WEEK IN FIGHT FOR THE GRAND TRUNK, GREATEST COMMERCIAL DEVELOPMENT CAMPAIGN EVER CONDUCTED BY A NEW ENGLAND PAPER

Fac-simile of pages from the Boston Evening and Sunday American for the week beginning April 23, showing how the fight to bring the Grand Trunk Railway to Boston was begun by the American; the call for volunteers in the campaign; full page editorial arousing New England to the importance of the project; the endorsement of the plan by the Legislature; the resolutions passed in its favor by the Boston City Council, and the surrender of President Mellen in the face of an overwhelming public sentiment.

STEEL TRUST IS ATTACKED BY BRANDEIS

Boston Lawyer Says It Has Failed to Make Good Economically and Socially,

FAVORS LA FOLLETTE IDEA

Wisconsin Senator's Amendment to Sherman Law the Only Trust Remedy.

NEW YORK, Jan. 13.—Before the Republican Club of New York, Louis D. Brandeis, the noted Boston lawyer, to-day discussed the La Follette amendment to the Sherman trust law, declaring that the amendment would make the law more effective, without changing a word of the original statute.

Mr. Brandeis is declared that there are no such things as "natural monopolies," so called, and cited the Oil Trust and the Steel Trust as "most unnatural monopolies."

Particularly bitter was Mr. Brandeis in his characterization of the Steel Trust, about which he says:

"Having driven out unionism, it has taught the American worker what an 'iron Master' really is. The Steel Trust has indeed been The Prince and the Pauperizer."

Mr. Brandeis, in the course of his speech, said:

Praises La Follette Bill.

"The La Follette bill, itself, may more properly be described as a supplement to rather than as an amendment of the Sherman law. The La Follette bill does not change a word of the eight sections which are now comprised in the Sherman act. It undertakes merely to utilize the experience of the twenty-one years which have passed since its enactment to improve what may be termed its administrative features. I seek:

"First: To make the law more certain in application.

"Second: To make its enforcement easier.

"Third: To make the remedy more effective and adequate.

"But before the uncertainties from which business is suffering can be removed, Congress must decide what the fundamental economic and social policy shall be. For we are at the parting of the ways, and we cannot advance until we decide whether the road we are to take shall be that of competition or monopoly.

"In other words, shall we abandon as obsolete the long cherished policy of competition and accept in its place the long detested policy of monopoly? The issue is not (as it is usually stated by advocates of monopoly): 'Shall we have unrestricted competition or regulated monopoly?' It is: 'Shall we have "regulated" competition or "regulated" monopoly.

"The policy of regulated competition is

Parlor Socialist Writes in to Us, Explaining About Those Drinking Cups.

Last Sunday the AMERICAN printed a story about the New Haven's announcement of free drinking cups on passenger trains, called attention to the fact that the announcement was unaccompanied by any hint of increased fares or rates, and asked, "What's the Matter With Bro. Mellen?"

This answer has been received:

Editor, Boston AMERICAN:

You ask a question in your Sunday paper: "What's the matter with Bro. Mellen?"

Answer: The company which is to furnish free drinking cups for the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad is paying for the privilege.

It is an advertising scheme. The drinking cups are covered with advertisements and the railway company get theirs.

Do not for a moment think that Mellen's gang are a lot of philanthropists. They have just borrowed $70,000,000 for one year at four per cent. That means about $1,200,000, with perhaps one per cent., or $300,000 more for underwritings; a total of $1,500,000. They need the money they'll get for the drinking cup "privilege."

(Signed) FAY BIAN.

Which, if our socialistic friend be quite right about it, goes to show that there is nothing the matter with Bro. Mellen, as usual.

MISS TAFT'S SURE AIM.

Hit With Snowball by Small Boy, She Retaliates With Precision.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 13.—Miss Helen Taft, daughter of the President, was walking across La Fayette Park from the White House to-day when a mischievous urchin hit her in the back with a snowball. Then he hid behind a park bench.

Miss Taft turned and saw the youngster and making a snowball for herself threw it straight at the lad. It hit him squarely and knocked off his cap. The surprised youngster grinned his admiration.

Miss Taft laughed and went her way.

AGED MAN DIES SUDDENLY.

Stricken in Doorway Few Feet From His Home in Roxbury.

Louis Aarons, aged eighty-two, of N. Wyoming street, Roxbury, was found lying in the doorway of No. 15, a few steps away from his home yesterday. He was discovered by a passer-by who notified the police. The aged man was rushed to the City Hospital in an unconscious condition. When he arrived there the examining physician pronounced him dead.

NEW WORLD AIR RECORD.

Vedrine Flies More Than 88 Miles in One Hour.

PARIS, Jan. 13.—Pierre John Vedrine, the famous French aviator, establishes a new world's record for speed to-day when he flew 142 kilometers (88.23 miles) in one hour.

A. G. VANDERBILTS FORSAKE AMERICA

Report That They Will Make Future Home in England and France.

PARIS, Jan. 13.—Friends of Alfred G. Vanderbilt and his bride, formerly Mrs. Smith Hollins McKim, of New York and Baltimore, to-day heard an interesting report that the young couple will probably exile themselves from their native land and join the rapidly growing colony of expatriated Americans in London. Mr. and Mrs. Vanderbilt have left for a cruise up the Nile, and it was impossible to get in communication with them to attempt to verify the rumor.

It is understood, however, that before laying this city Mr. Vanderbilt told many of his friends that he had taken a permanent place in London and would spend his time in England and France. His occasional visits to the United States will be only to meet his demands.

The complaint of the Vanderbilts is the same of that of all the other rich Americans who have become self exiles. They are annoyed at the inquisitiveness of the American press which chronicles all their doings and also at the "middle classes" of their native land who freely criticize the foibles of the "four hundred."

They find social life in the Old World to be free from these annoying features. No one here pays any attention to what his neighbor does.

MILE-A-MINUTE ICE BOAT.

NEWPORT, Jan. 13.—Commodore William C. Pratt of the War College has shown some speed as an ice boat navigator. During the past week he traveled at better than a mile a minute on a sloop-rigged ice boat on Easton's pond in this city. His brother-in-law, Alfred Johnson of Boston, is also an ice-yacht enthusiast. Dr. Horace Beck and J. Howland Gardner, agent of the Fall River Line Steamship Company, are having ice-yachts built and it is expected that there will soon be some good races on Easton's pond.

RESIGNS A PRESIDENCY.

Diaz of Nicaragua Retires in Favor of General Lucis Mena.

BLUEFIELDS, Nicaragua, Jan. 13.—Yielding to hostile sentiment toward him backed by the army, President Adolfo Diaz will resign the presidency in favor of General Lucis Mena, and will sail next week for New Orleans, it was announced to-day. General Mena has been occupying the executive mansion for several months, virtually exercising the office of President.

WALSH'S BODY FOUND.

Remains of Deputy Fire Chief in Equitable Ruins.

NEW YORK, Jan. 13.—The body of Battalion Chief William J. Walsh was found this afternoon in the ruins of the Equitable building between the third and fourth floors on the Cedar street side. Searchers had been hunting for it three days since the building was destroyed, and Walsh lost his life after ordering other firemen out of danger.

WOMEN INJURED IN FALL RIVER FIRE

Three Jump from Second Story Window—Eight Families Homeless.

FALL RIVER, Jan. 13.—Three women were forced to jump from second-story windows after one had thrown her two-year child to the street, two were injured and twenty persons and eight families were made homeless to-night by a three-alarm fire which destroyed a tenement block in the thickly populated South End section of the city. The fire threatened nearby tenement houses and mill structures.

The injured:

Mrs. Catherine Carey, 45, to City Hospital, suffering from injuries caused by leap and from shock and exposure.

Hurled Child Out of Window.

Mrs. Carey's daughter, Ellen, mother of the baby, jumped from the second floor to the sidewalk after hurling her child into the arms of two policemen. The other women who jumped was Mrs. Philip Bellemire. Mrs. Carey jumped first, falling heavily to the bricks below. The other two women were caught in the outstretched arms of two policemen.

The fire, which was the worst in the mill district in months, started from an oil explosion in the flat on the second floor occupied by Mrs. Bellemire. The Careys were aroused to their danger by the shouts of the crowd in the street.

Ignores Cries of Onlookers.

Despite the cries of onlookers to wait until the firemen had run up a ladder, Mrs. Carey mounted the window sill and jumped to the street. When her daughter appeared at the window with her child in one arm, there were more cries to wait.

The mother of the infant looked down. Patrolmen Kelley and Davis of the Southern police station came in close to the building and caught the baby first and next the mother of the child. The same policemen caught Mrs. Bellemire as she fell.

Tenants of the house who escaped uninjured were cared for by neighbors. The loss amounted to $10,000.

FIND BIG CHAIN OF GOLD.

Two Little Boys at Play See It Gleaming in the Snow.

TAUNTON, Jan. 13.—Johnny Conway and Eddie Knowles, six and seven years old, respectively, living at Whitten Junction, between here and Attleboro, saw something yellow gleaming in the snow this afternoon. They picked it up and found it was a chain long enough to serve as reins, so they began to "play horse."

Policeman Caswell saw the yellow chain and suspected gold. The assayer here said the chain was pure gold, weighing fourteen pounds, troy weight, and worth a small fortune. The police thought the chain had been stolen from one of the Attleboro jewelry plants. How it came to be in the snow is a mystery.

ELOPERS PHONE NEWS AND ARE FORGIVEN

B. W. Atwood, Boston Business Man, Makes Dolly Arnold His Bride.

A pretty romance in which a kind telephone operator did her best to help pop the question, came to light yesterday when Boston and Plymouth County society folk learned of the elopement and marriage of Dolly Bicknell Arnold of North Abington and Colebrook, N. H., and Benjamin W. Atwood, a Boston automobile man. The facts came by way of the parents of the couple following the news they got over the telephone that "Dolly and Ben had gone and got married."

The couple were married in Brockton last Wednesday, Rev. Dr. A. Marion Hyde officiating. They met in Boston, the bride coming from Colebrook, where she had been teaching school. First they called up Former Representative Wallace E. W. N. Arnold of North Abington, shoe manufacturer and father of the eloping girl.

Announced by Telephone.

"Father, Ben and I are married," announced the daughter's voice over the wire.

Then they phoned Bertram W. Atwood, boy manufacturer, of Pleasant street, Whitman.

"Pa," came the son's sweet voice, "just called you to tell you that Dolly and I got married to-day."

The parents were naturally surprised. Last night they said they had open arms for the new son-in-law and daughter-in-law.

The elopement was the immediate result of a telephone talk young Atwood tried to have with his sweetheart just before Leap Year came. He put in a call from his Boston office for Colebrook. He answered the ting-a-ling-ling that came later.

He—Hello, is that you, Dolly?

She—Hello, speak a little louder, please. I can't understand.

He—Dolly, Dolly, can you hear? I want you to marry me?

She—Louder, for I can't seem to understand.

It was here the telephone operator at Colebrook ventured to deliver young Atwood's message for him.

The operator did, and came back with the word over the line to the Back Bay that there was no answer.

Off for Colebrook.

Atwood immediately got busy with a special delivery letter, to which he proposed in writing. He got an answer. What it was, he hasn't told his friends, but he took the next train for Colebrook. Last Wednesday Miss Arnold gave up her school, joined her sweetheart in Boston and took a train for Brockton.

The bride is a graduate of the Weston School, of Boston, and went to Colebrook to teach last September. She is nineteen years of age, pretty and accomplished. Atwood, whose father is one of the wealthiest residents of Whitman, is twenty-three years old. Returning from their honeymoon, they will reside in Whitman.

BOSTON TO HAVE DIRECT LINE TO MONTREAL, WEST AND ORIENT BY THE GRAND TRUNK PACIFIC

Legislature Has Already Unanimously Invited the Canadian Trunk Line to Make Boston Its Eastern Terminus—Proposed Connecting Road Would Be Built to This City From New Hampshire Line

WITH a heart filled with joy, the AMERICAN is able to announce to its more than a million readers this morning that they have won their great fight for the commercial development of New England, and that the Grand Trunk Railway is knocking at the door of Boston and asking to come in.

The AMERICAN and its readers began the working of "bringing the Grand Trunk to Boston" in April of last year. Yesterday afternoon the Grand Trunk filed at the Massachusetts State House a formal request for entry to the port of Boston.

The petition filed yesterday—probably by Judge Thomas W. Kenefick of Palmer, for Judge Kenefick was at the Touraine all day—suggests a plan by which the Grand Trunk will come straightway from Montreal to Boston, shooting into the State of New Hampshire from White River Junction, Vt., and, perhaps, paralleling the Boston & Maine line by way of Concord, Manchester, Nashua and Lowell.

The Massachusetts State House had practically closed shop for the week when the Grand Trunk petition made its first appearance, so that the consequent sensation was limited to the few newspapermen who were still about. The reporters hurried down to the Touraine, however, and there found the poet-press agent, Mr. Cy Warman of Montreal. Officially, Mr. Warman is "general assistant" to President Hays.

"I know just what you want, boys," Mr. Warman said, "but I cannot talk. Not at this time. I have here the official announcement of this important matted agreed upon by Mr. Fitzhugh and other officials of the Grand Trunk. I think it tells the whole story. In any event, it is all we are prepared to say at this time. You may be sure there will be more later on."

DIRECT CONNECTION TO THE WEST AND ORIENT.

This was the formal announcement given to the newspapers:

Boston, January 13, 1912.

Application was made to the Legislature yesterday for an act to enlarge and extend the corporate powers of the Southern New England Railroad Corporation.

This company asks authority to construct and maintain a railroad for the transportation of passengers, express and freight, by the use of steam or other motive power, from some convenient point or points in the county of Middlesex, on the dividing line between the Commonwealth of Massachusetts and the State of New Hampshire, where a connection will be made with a railroad to be constructed by a railroad corporation established under the laws of the State of New Hampshire, for the purpose of constructing a railroad from a point on the dividing line between the State of Vermont and the State of New Hampshire, to a point or points on the dividing line between the Commonwealth of Massachusetts and the State of New Hampshire, this railroad to be located and constructed through various towns in the county of Middlesex and into the city of Boston.

Authority is asked to build a line from a point in the town of Blackstone, Mass., to Boston, and from a point in the town of Douglas into the city of Worcester, Mass. They want authority to own and operate steamships. The statement is made that this forward movement is in response to the unanimous invitation extended to the Grand Trunk last year by the Massachusetts Legislature, by the municipal authorities of Boston and by a number of commercial bodies, in fact, by the people of New England. They believe it to be to the interest of New England, as it will give all of New England, through the Grand Trunk Railway system, direct connection with New York, Michigan, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Wisconsin, and through the Chicago gateway with all the West and Southwest, the Northwest and the Orient.

It specially developed that—now that the Grand Trunk is likely to enter upon a big legislative fight with the New York, New Haven & Hartford,—the erstwhile genial and voluble Mr. Warman had suddenly taken on the secretive nature of the festive clam. There was absolutely nothing he wanted to talk about. The announcement told its own story. The

GRAND TRUNK RAILWAY TO MAKE BOSTON ITS EASTERN TERMINUS

"Sure" would have to be content with that.

Judge Kenedick, of counsel for the road, came to Mr. Warman's room on the ninth floor of the Touraine. The Judge, always chip of newspaper folk, was no more talkative than Warman. It was quite plain that both gentlemen had been admonished from Montreal, Can., that the Grand Trunk Railway was saying a whole lot when it filed its petition and that this will be about all for the present.

American Given the Credit.

"I will say this to you, sir," Judge Kenedick said to the representative of the AMERICAN, "that your paper will certainly be justified in taking a great deal of credit for this result of a long publicity fight. It was the AMERICAN which paved the way for this announcement."

All of which was cordially indorsed by General Assistant Warman, who, moreover, reminded the AMERICAN representative of the letter sent to this newspaper by President Hays last Summer announcing the arrival of petitions signed by nearly 100,000 readers.

"The AMERICAN," Warman said, "has really performed a great service for the people, the commerce and the industry of New England. That it has also proved a good friend of the Grand Trunk Railway has been said by others better able to speak than I am."

Will Come Before Committee.

After which there was nothing more, and Mr. Warman and Judge Kenedick went into close conference. Judge Kenedick, who was prominent as a Beacon Hill statesman a dozen years ago, wouldn't even venture to say to what legislative committee the Grand Trunk petition is likely to be assigned. There is good ground for the belief, however, that the petition will be referred to the Joint Committee on Railroads.

Beacon Hill Sends Message.

Never perhaps in the history of legislation and railroading has any newspaper campaign shown such a result as was manifested when Beacon Hill sent a message to Canada asking the great Canadian railroad to come down and give New England relief from a monopoly.

The record would be incomplete without quoting here the language of the Grand Trunk "order" unanimously adopted by the Massachusetts House of Representatives at the end of April last. The order was introduced on the 26th by Judge John P. Meaney of Blackstone. Judge Meaney, who was prominent as a Beacon Hill statesman a dozen years ago, wouldn't even venture to say to what legislative committee the Grand Trunk petition is likely to be assigned. There is good ground for the belief, however, that the petition will be referred to the Joint Committee on Railroads.

One man, "Come to Boston," it said to the Grand Trunk.

STORY OF AMERICAN'S GRAND TRUNK CAMPAIGN

The Boston AMERICAN opened its campaign to bring the Grand Trunk to Boston less than nine months ago, to be exact, on Sunday, April 13, 1911. The campaign, conducted by the AMERICAN for its readers and won through their efforts, has been a glorious one.

At the start the "bring the Grand Trunk to Boston" campaign was laughed at by one or two newspapers and coldshouldered by nearly all the rest. That a popular newspaper might be successful where prominent men had fallen down was simply preposterous and not to be thought of for a moment. The AMERICAN went ahead.

"Private and authentic information comes to the AMERICAN," it was said at the opening of the campaign, "that the time has come to strike and strike quickly in behalf of Boston. This newspaper is convinced, and its readers know whether it be kept faith with them, that if 100,000 New Englanders will get together in this movement Mr. Morgan's monopoly of New England transportation will shortly be confronted with a giant young competitor."

Prophetic Words!

As shortly—perhaps the best in New England—had said to the AMERICAN that, regardless of the reports of an embassy to Montreal, the Grand Trunk would come to Boston, would serve New England, "if the people wanted it in earnest."

It was refreshing to find a railway corporation among what the people wanted and the AMERICAN pitching in to assist the co-operation of its readers and their friends.

Story of the Campaign.

Everybody in New England remembers the "Boston AMERICAN-Grand Trunk" campaign and is familiar with every important detail of it. First of all, what did the people—the people at large—really want? How did they feel about bringing in the Grand Trunk? There was one way to find out. The AMERICAN adopted that way. This newspaper called immediately for 100,000 volunteers. The form of a petition was for many days conspicuously displayed in the daily and Sunday AMERICAN. This was the text of that petition, you will remember:

GRAND TRUNK PETITION.

Commercial Development Editor,
Boston American, Boston, Mass.

I believe that the entry of the Grand Trunk to the Port of Boston would be greatly to the advantage of New England, and will join in requesting the Grand Trunk to come.

Names. Addresses. City or Town.

Commercial Development Editor,
Boston American,
80 Summer Street, Boston.

Adopt Favorable Resolution.

The volunteers were heard from at once, although a number of days elapsed before the required total was at hand. Chambers of commerce, merchants' associations, boards of trade everywhere in northern New England adopted favorable resolutions and sent them to the AMERICAN. Members of these bodies signed the petitions signed the AMERICAN petition. Here and there a cynic pointed out the lack of faith in the promises of the New Haven management in the things for New England in return for the blind surrender of New England transportation, and New Haven had failed to make good. New England was disappointed and disillusioned, too.

Meanwhile reporters for the AMERICAN were seeking to back up this call of the people with the votes of their representatives.

Governor Foss praised the AMERICAN for its zeal in the cause of the public and joined in the invitation.

The Massachusetts Legislature spoke as one man. "Come to Boston," it said to the Grand Trunk.

Beacon Hill Sends Message.

PRESIDENT HAYS' APPRECIATION OF AMERICAN'S EFFORT

President C. M. Hays.

On June 26, last, President Charles M. Hays of the Grand Trunk wrote this letter to the editor of the Boston AMERICANs

Dear Sir:

Mr. Warman has called my attention to your letter of June 1 and the box of signatures to the petition inviting the Grand Trunk to come to Boston.

All of us here appreciate very much the good offices of the Boston AMERICAN in procuring this long list of petitioners and I write to assure you of my personal appreciation of your efforts.

(Signed), C. M. HAYS.

dunty to express my approval of these resolutions, and to assure you that the citizens of Boston would welcome the establishment by the Grand Trunk Railroad of a terminus in this city.

The entrance of your road into Boston would complete the natural trunk route, with a satisfactory outlet, from the northwestern provinces to the sea, and the Dominion of Canada would participate in the benefits no less than the city of Boston and the transportation company. I have been glad to further such a mutually profitable arrangement, and trust the plans which are said to be under way may be carried to a successful issue.

Very truly yours,
JOHN F. FITZGERALD,
Mayor.

Counting the Petitions.

In May and June a force of clerks in the office of the AMERICAN was employed to sort and count the flood of petitions and arrange them in state-wide order. Soon there were 10,000 of them, 20,000 and 50,000. The bags and stacks increased from day to day.

Late in July the AMERICAN felt justified in saying this:

It requires no prophet, reviewing this campaign and studying yesterday's statements by the Governor, to have known of Grand Trunk legislation before the General Court of 1912. The Grand Trunk IS coming to Boston.

RAILROAD RIVALS ON BOTH SIDES NATIVES OF UNITED STATES

The great railroad men who are about to begin the final engagement in the battle for the railroad business of New England are all of them—Canadians and Americans alike—natives of the United States.

In some respects, on the human side, it would appear to be a battle between Yankeeland and the Middle West.

President Charles M. Hays of the Grand Trunk is a native of Rock Island, Ill. Vice-President Earl Hopkins Pitsinger was born in Montgomery County, Missouri. General Assistant Cy Warman, who many years ago wrote "Sweet Marie," hails from Greenup, Illinois.

Singularly enough, Hays and Pitsinger and Warman went from the Middle West to do battle for big railroading interests, while Mellen and Byrnes first attracted general attention in the Middle West.

Mellen Began In New Hampshire.

President Mellen is sixty years old. He began railroading at Concord, New Hampshire, when he was eighteen, as clerk in the office of the cashier of the old Northern Railroad. Twenty years later he was general traffic manager of the Union Pacific. He came to Boston in '93 as general manager of the New York & New England, and in the same year became a New Haven vice president.

For seven years, beginning about '96, Mr. Mellen was with the Northern Pacific in its president. There is a story that he and James J. Hill had their little differences and that one of them decided to go. Since 1903 Mr. Mellen has been with the New Haven. He is a fighter from the ground up, but he sometimes makes mistakes and he has not always succeeded in getting the confidence and the moral support of the great mass of the people.

Vice-President Byrnes is fifty-eight. He entered the railway business through the law office, being a regular attorney. In Mellen's Northern Pacific days, the men from Vermont was pretty close to the man from Massachusetts. They have worked double ever since. One relates no confidence when he reports that Mr. Byrnes thinks Charles S. Mellen one of the greatest men now living.

Hays' Notable Career.

President Hays of the Grand Trunk is a man of fifty-six. It would take more eyes to read the names of all his places on various railroads, but he was with the Grand Trunk in the late 80's, resigned to become president of the Southern Pacific, and with the S. P. to go back to the Grand Trunk.

First Vice-president Pitsinger began by railroading" and for a time was with the Wabash. For many years he has been to Mr. Hays as Mr. Byrnes is to Mr. Mellen. His principal duty in New England is to take care of the Central Vermont. Naturally this placed him in charge of the "Southern New England's" development, and so, naturally, he will be the big Grand Trunk man in such a battle as is likely to eventuate on Beacon Hill or at Concord, N. H. Hays and Mellen will be off stage somewhere. Pitsinger and Byrnes will have the spotlight.

It is likely to be a great battle, and it is likely to occupy more than one page of future histories of New England.

BOSTON WILL HAVE DIRECT RAILWAY LINE TO MONTREAL AND FAR WEST

HOW SENTIMENT WAS MADE FOR GRAND TRUNK

The mayors of several cities joined in the campaign. Congressmen Peters, Curley and Gardner and Ex Henry M. Whitney approved of the movement.

It was taken for granted by the AMERICAN when the Grand Trunk would want to come to Boston "man fashion" by the most direct route. That route would be through Southern New Hampshire to the Massachusetts line, then through Northern Hampshire. The result was the same as in Massachusetts. New Hampshire knew from bitter experience, long before Massachusetts began taking her lesson, just what it meant to have "one railroad." Speaker Frank A. Musgrove of the New Hampshire House of Representatives was one of the first in his State to approve the Boston AMERICAN'S Grand Trunk campaign. Mr. Musgrove is now the State Auditor. He is one of the leaders of the Progressive movement in his State and to-day seems likely to be the next candidate for Governor.

Senator Chandler's Approval.

Former United States Senator William E. Chandler, now, to the regret of all, an invalid at his Winter home in Washington, D. C., gave his approval of the work of the AMERICAN, and a good word for the Grand Trunk, and voiced his well known views on railroad monopoly. As one of the first great victims of the railroad in politics, Senator Chandler spoke as one who knows.

While the petitions were rolling up it was found that President Hays was on his way to London and a meeting of his board. Arrangements for a special for the Hearst newspapers was waiting for him. Mr. Hays could not be seen, however, but President Hays said that the AMERICAN petitions and the Grand Trunk movement in this State would be brought to the attention of the directors. Soon after the meeting in London was held and the next morning the AMERICAN received this cablegram in reply:

Hays's Cable to the AMERICAN.

To the Boston AMERICAN, Boston, Mass:

When the Boston AMERICAN petitions and the official resolutions referred to in your telegram are received by me, to be placed before the Grand Trunk board of directors, I am certain the subject will be duly considered by that body.

(Signed) HAYS.

President Hays returned to this state in May and just before the last Sunday in the month received a message from the AMERICAN. The AMERICAN'S editor in his office at Montreal. The great boxes of petitions were almost ready for shipment to Canada.

Not yet ready to take the public into his confidence, President Hays sent a brief message which was interpreted to be an invitation to New England to keep on working and to "hold the Fort."

This is what President Hays said to the AMERICAN last May in Montreal, just before the last of the petitions of AMERICAN readers to "come to Boston":

Grand Trunk Grateful.

"The officers of the Grand Trunk Railway are certainly grateful to the people of Boston and the neighboring section of New England for the display of confidence in our enterprise. We could not well be otherwise.

"In the past your newspaper has taken, to the matter of inviting us to Boston, a little short of hostile tone. I believe the very first person who met me in London, on my arrival from Plymouth, was a representative of the Hearst News Service. He called for a formal statement concerning the matter.

"He told me—your representative in London—about the unanimous vote of the Massachusetts Senate, the Massachusetts House and the Boston City Council, and I assured him that I would place the resolutions before our board of directors just as soon as the official records had come to me. They have been away a month. To-day, for the first time, I saw the transcript of these votes. To-day, also, I received the letter of his honor the Mayor, and saw the statement of his excellency the Governor. You tell me I am soon to have the petition of 100,000 NEW Englanders.

"Such a testimonial as this would make any railroad proud of it, it makes me very happy. What shall I say to make this matter clear?

"I will say this. I will say that not only the executive committee of your House of Representatives, your Senate, your City Council, together with the letter of Mayor Fitzgerald and the message of Governor Foss, but also the 100,000 petition of the AMERICAN will go to London and be formally placed before our board of directors.

"Moreover, I believe I can safely say, to Boston and New England, that these votes, these expressions, this request, will receive all the consideration—all the courteous consideration—to which they are entitled.

"For myself, personally, I wish you would say to the people of New England that I fully and deeply appreciate the good will back of this movement."

CREDIT GIVEN TO THE AMERICAN BY HUGH BANCROFT

Hugh Bancroft, chairman of the Directors of the Port of Boston, said last night:

"I have already assured representatives of the Grand Trunk Road that the Port Directors would co-operate in every way within their power towards securing proper water-front terminals for the Grand Trunk Railroad.

"The most powerful examination of the railroad map will show that Boston is the logical outlet for the great Transcontinentals, especially during the six months that Montreal is frozen up.

"The prospective coming of the Grand Trunk emphasizes the necessity of public ownership of water terminals and I believe that public sentiment will place the port directors in such a financial position that they will be able soon to acquire all the railroad terminals on the harbor.

"In accepting my appointment I told GoGovernor Foss among other things that I felt one of the biggest single things that our port would do would be to induce the Grand Trunk to enter Boston.

"Credit for the great interest and public demand that brought about the petition must go to the AMERICAN. It was another triumph for progressive journalism."

STORY OF AMERICAN'S GRAND TRUNK CAMPAIGN

The Boston AMERICAN opened its campaign to bring the Grand Trunk to Boston less than nine months ago, to be exact, on Sunday, April 13, 1911. The campaign, conducted by the AMERICAN for its readers and won through their efforts, has been a glorious one.

At the start the "bring the Grand Trunk to Boston" campaign was laughed at by one or two newspapers and coldshouldered by nearly all the rest. That a popular newspaper might be successful where prominent men had fallen down was simply preposterous and not to be thought of for a moment. The AMERICAN went ahead.

"Private and authentic information comes to the AMERICAN," it was said at the opening of the campaign, "that the time has come to strike and strike quickly in behalf of Boston. This newspaper is convinced, and its readers know whether it be kept faith with them, that if 100,000 New Englanders will get together in this movement Mr. Morgan's monopoly of New England transportation will shortly be confronted with a giant young competitor."

Prophetic Words!

As shortly—perhaps the best in New England—had said to the AMERICAN that, regardless of the reports of an embassy to Montreal, the Grand Trunk would come to Boston, would serve New England, "if the people wanted it in earnest."

It was refreshing to find a railway corporation among what the people wanted and the AMERICAN pitching in to assist the co-operation of its readers and their friends.

Story of the Campaign.

Everybody in New England remembers the "Boston AMERICAN-Grand Trunk" campaign and is familiar with every important detail of it. First of all, what did the people—the people at large—really want? How did they feel about bringing in the Grand Trunk? There was one way to find out. The AMERICAN adopted that way. This newspaper called immediately for 100,000 volunteers. The form of a petition was for many days conspicuously displayed in the daily and Sunday AMERICAN. This was the text of that petition, you will remember:

GRAND TRUNK PETITION.

Commercial Development Editor,
Boston American, Boston, Mass.

I believe that the entry of the Grand Trunk to the Port of Boston would be greatly to the advantage of New England, and will join in requesting the Grand Trunk to come.

Names. Addresses. City or Town.

Commercial Development Editor,
Boston American,
80 Summer Street, Boston.

Adopt Favorable Resolution.

The volunteers were heard from at once, although a number of days elapsed before the required total was at hand. Chambers of commerce, merchants' associations, boards of trade everywhere in northern New England adopted favorable resolutions and sent them to the AMERICAN. Members of these bodies signed the petitions signed the AMERICAN petition. Here and there a cynic pointed out the lack of faith in the promises of the New Haven management in the things for New England in return for the blind surrender of New England transportation, and New Haven had failed to make good. New England was disappointed and disillusioned, too.

Meanwhile reporters for the AMERICAN were seeking to back up this call of the people with the votes of their representatives.

Governor Foss praised the AMERICAN for its zeal in the cause of the public and joined in the invitation.

The Massachusetts Legislature spoke as one man. "Come to Boston," it said to the Grand Trunk.

LIFE INSURANCE COMPANIES

They Are Closely Observing Public Health Conditions

An examining physician for one of the prominent Life Insurance Companies, in an interview on the subject, made the astonishing statement that the reason why so many applicants for insurance are rejected is because kidney trouble is so common to the American people, and the large majority of applicants do not even suspect that they have the disease.

He states that judging from his own experience and reports from druggists who are constantly in direct touch with the public, there is one preparation that has probably been more successful in relieving and curing these diseases than any remedy known. The mild and healing influence of Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root is soon realized. It stands the highest for its remarkable record of cures.

We feel that Swamp-Root is a strictly an herbal compound and we would advise our readers who feel in need of such a remedy to give it a trial. It is on sale at all drug stores in bottles of two sizes—fifty-cents and one-dollar.

However, if you wish first to test its wonderful merits, send to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N.Y., for a sample bottle. Absolutely free. When writing be sure and mention the Boston Sunday American.

AMERICAN PRAISED FOR GRAND TRUNK VICTORY

EUGENE N. FOSS, Governor of Massachusetts.

Good! I am delighted to hear it. The entry of the Grand Trunk Railway system into Boston would undoubtedly be greatly to the commercial advantage of the Commonwealth. I am sure that the Grand Trunk will be welcomed by the people of the State, and I feel confident that its petition for admittance will be received kindly by the Legislature.

I have always advocated competition as against monopoly. In my inaugural message to this year's Legislature I touched upon that question somewhat extensively.

By the way, the AMERICAN practically started the agitation for the entrance of the Grand Trunk into the port of Boston. If the road finally comes in here it will be due to a great extent, to the efforts of the AMERICAN to bring this about.

JOHN F. FITZGERALD, Mayor of Boston.

It is good news that the Grand Trunk has decided to come into Boston. The statement by the Grand Trunk that it makes this move in response to the unanimous invitation extended to it last year by the Massachusetts Legislature, the municipal authorities, a number of commercial bodies; in fact, by the people of New England, is a most extraordinary illustration of the influence of a great newspaper.

All these things were brought about the Boston AMERICAN, which boldly championed the Grand Trunk, and which originated the resolutions passed by the city and State and commercial bodies referred to. The Boston AMERICAN fought hard for the Grand Trunk, and I want to extend to it my congratulations for the success of the campaign.

Heartily co-operated at the time here I felt that the more railroads we entered Boston the better off they would be. The entrance of Grand, live, virile railroad is going to of tremendous importance to the Port of Boston.

If the New Haven recently secured a through connection to the West were practically cut off from Great West at Albany. We didn't have lot of influence beyond that point.

Now are going to have two great roads through to the West. It will enable us to draw up a bit on New York, which up to this time has had the pick of the business through its numerous trunk lines.

The coming of the Grand Trunk to this city means what I have always fought for—a bigger, better, busier Boston.

DIRECTOR WILLIAM B. LITCHFIELD of the Boston Chamber of Commerce:

"I am very glad to hear that the Grand Trunk has at length decided to move on Boston. It is what we have been hoping for and it means that new life will be instilled into our commerce and business. There can no doubt that the Grand Trunk will find excellent terminal facilities, probably upon the east. If necessary the great flats at Lynn could be utilized for a railroad terminal if nearer approach to the city were found impossible. In any event it is a splendid thing that the big Canadian road has decided to make this city one of its ports."

MAYOR THOMAS F. HIGGINS of Fall River:

"The entry of the Grand Trunk railroad into Boston marks a new epoch in commercial development of the Commonwealth, and, in fact all New England. The tireless efforts exerted by the Boston AMERICAN in bringing about the accomplishment deserves commendation of citizens and business men alike."

"This announcement is extremely gratifying. It sounds business like and means much for the port of Boston. I do not think there is anybody with the welfare of the city at heart who will not be glad to learn that the Grand Trunk intends to come here. At present, of course, there is some vagueness as to the plans, but they look awfully good, and as they come nearer, they will probably look better."

John H. Fahey, Director of the Boston Chamber of Commerce and chairman of the party which toured Europe this Summer in the interests of Boston:

"This is one of the biggest steps forward that Boston has made in a long, long while. The entrance of the Grand Trunk Railroad means tremendous things for our future. In this connection the AMERICAN deserves the highest praise and credit for calling the attention of the public to the desirability of attracting this railroad and presenting the state of mind of New England to the Grand Trunk directors.

"The AMERICAN has been to the fore on other public projects, as well as in this Grand Trunk matter. I believe that one of the primary functions of a newspaper is to be useful in the upbuilding of the community, and the AMERICAN has always been conspicuous in this constructive owrk.

"I have felt all along that the Grand Trunk would come to Boston in time, and I sincerely trust the time has come. Certainly the preliminary announcement sounds like business."

"Any railroad which will penetrate through the Canadian Provinces and will bring to Boston the greater share of the traffic, to the road which we are earnestly waiting to welcome, and efforts will be made in the direction of providing them with suitable terminals. I want to felicitate the AMERICAN upon the enterprise which it has shown in stimulating the prospective railroad."

JOSEPH WALKER, former Speaker of the Massachusetts House of Representatives:

"I am strongly in favor of admitting the Grand Trunk Railroad into Boston. I have always favored such a move. I am in favor of admitting any Canadian lines into this city. I know that it would mean much to the business interests. I think that we should give them the best facilities possible. I am heartily in favor of it all."

JAMES E. O'DONNELL, Mayor of Lowell:

I heartily endorse the petition which will bring the Grand Trunk into Boston. Every city in New England should lend its support to this movement, because every city in this section is bound to benefit. It means that eventually Boston harbor will become a strong rival of New York. The Boston AMERICAN is to be commended for the work that it has done in this direction.

MAYOR CHARLES E. FRENCH of Melrose:

The Boston AMERICAN has my heartiest congratulations for opening the way for the Grand Trunk railroad into Boston. Every one of us is working for a greater New England, and this is a big step in the right direction.

Fac-Simile of Petition Asking Grand Trunk to Come to Boston

Grand Trunk Petition

COMMERCIAL DEVELOPMENT EDITOR, Boston American, Boston, Mass.

I believe that the entry of the Grand Trunk to the Port of Boston would be greatly to our commercial advantage, and will join in requesting the Grand Trunk to come.

John F. Fitzgerald Mayor Boston
J. H. Connolly Director Boston Chamber of Commerce
Chairman Boston Port Development Committee
Anything that will bring business to Boston I favor
Joseph Walker
Charles H. Bartlett
John F. McDonald
E. J. Powers Pres. L. B. C. A. Tenement Reform League
H. C. Warren Asst. Secy. Boston Chamber of Commerce
Chas. E. Lewis, Secretary Massachusetts Real Estate Exchange

The petition inviting the Canadian Trunk Line to enter Boston was circulated throughout New England by the American, and about 100,000 signed it. Mayor Fitzgerald's name leading the list. The signatures filled a large packing case. They were sent to President Hays of the Grand Trunk at Montreal, and the petition made a vivid impression upon the officials of the company.

NEW HAVEN MERGER HASTENED VICTORY

There are men of prominence and experience in Boston who believe that the Grand Trunk would never have shown any desire to enter Boston if the Boston & Maine control had not passed into the hands of New Haven interests. Such, indeed, was substantially the report brought back to town in the month of July 1910, by James J. Storrow, then president of the Chamber of Commerce, and Mr. D. O. Ives, chairman of the Chamber's Transportation Committee.

"Mr. Hays," so reported Mr. Storrow and Mr. Ives, "impressed on us the fact that he had no complaint to make, and that Mr. Tuttle had been very fair in offering him facilities through the Boston & Maine."

The Grand Trunk was at that time preparing to enter Providence. The New Haven had already acquired, contrary to law, control of the Boston & Maine. The fight was on. It is still on.

On Sunday, July 17, 1910, the Sunday AMERICAN contained a story hinting at the great battle:

"With President Charles M. Hays of the Grand Trunk and President Charles S. Mellen of the New Haven sitting at the table," the AMERICAN said on that day a year and half ago, "each with a corps of expert advisers and each backed by millions of dollars, the most game of railroad chess is still in progress.

"What will be the next play?" asks Mr. Mellen, Boston's.

"Mr. Hays isn't saying.

"Mr. Hays looks up in Providence in mid-Winter. He wants a Rhode Island charter. Mr. Mellen, already asking 'what's in it for me?' figures to fight all Rhode Island backs the Canadian. 'Well,' says Mr. Mellen, 'let him have it. I'll take care of him outside of Rhode Island.'

"All so it has gone ever since. A move, an attempt to block; another move, another attempt to block; always, except as to Boston, with the Grand Trunk scoring.

"Wasn't it significant, that as soon as Boston Chamber of Commerce envoys had started for Montreal, to see Mr. Hays, there appeared the announcement that Mellen had bagged the Commonwealth docks for thirty years?

"What President Mellen meant when he said in Providence that he would 'take care' of President Hays 'outside of Rhode Island' has been a matter for conjecture, but the fact is that the New Haven at once began a vigorous fight against the Grand Trunk before the Massachusetts Board of Railroad Commissioners.

"The New Haven asked for a certificate of 'public exigency' permitting it to build parallel lines to Blackstone. The New Haven suddenly evinced a desire to build in the same territory. The Railroad Commission gave the Grand Trunk the certificate it wanted and the New Haven withdrew.

The Grand Trunk reaches Palmer because the Central Vermont is the lessee of the New London Northern, which runs 121 miles from the Sound, at New London, Ct., to Brattleboro, in Vermont. The main line of the Central Vermont, leased by the Grand Trunk, runs 177 miles from Windsor, Vt., to St. John, P. Q.

From that day to this, here, there and everywhere, in the open and behind the scenes, the New Haven has been trying to block its great rival.

Now it is the fight in Providence, one feature of which was the New Haven's attempt to build a freight house directly in the proposed path of the Grand Trunk. The Grand Trunk won.

MAYOR CONGRATULATES BOSTON AMERICAN ON ITS GREAT VICTORY

All these things were brought about by the Boston AMERICAN, which boldly championed the Grand Trunk, and which originated the resolutions passed by the city and State and commercial bodies referred to. The Boston AMERICAN fought hard for the Grand Trunk, and I want to extend to it my congratulations for the success of the campaign.—Mayor John F. Fitzgerald.

IF we all could live in the open with plenty of fresh air and exercise, our health would be better.

But, this is an age when living conditions and transportation facilities have decreased the amount of exercise which Nature intended the body should have in order to keep it in perfect health.

Nervous trouble of one sort or another is the stamp of American nationality. It is most evident in indigestion, and indigestion prevents the body from storing up the reserve strength that is its greatest natural defense against disease.

The greatest aid to digestion, and consequently to the building up of reserve strength, is good alcohol taken in moderate amounts before meals.

When you take Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey you get a whiskey containing alcohol so good and free from adulterants that it can be used in even the severest cases of illness. It has all the value that alcohol in pure form is to humanity—no more and no less.

But the drunkard, the constant tippler, the man or woman who can't use alcohol without abusing it—never should let it pass their lips.

DOUBLE TRADING STAMPS FORENOONS

AMERICAN LED CAMPAIGN TO BRING GRAND TRUNK RAILROAD TO BOSTON

The following account of the AMERICAN'S fight to bring the Grand Trunk Railroad to Boston was printed in the Sunday AMERICAN on April 30, 1911:

The greatest commercial development campaign ever conducted by a New England newspaper was considerably past half way to its goal last night at 7 o'clock, when 69,404 New Englanders had signed the AMERICAN petition asking the Grand Trunk Railway to come to Boston. The polls are still open.

One hundred thousand New England rs are joining in the movement. Never before in the history of American railroading has such an invitation come out to a great railroad from a great people. No railroad can deny such an appeal.

Inaugurated only a week ago, the AMERICAN campaign has enlisted the hearty support of lawmakers, city governments, Mayors, Selectmen, boards of trade and citizens prominent in every walk of life. Never before has such splendid official support been given to the work of a militant newspaper.

The AMERICAN campaign to bring the Grand Trunk to Boston has been indorsed unanimously by the Senate of Massachusetts and the House of Representatives.

It has been unanimously indorsed by the Boston City Council.

Governor Foss has heartily encouraged the movement.

Mayor Gaynor of New York.
Mayor Hibbard of Boston.
Mayor Fitzgerald of Boston.
Mayor Curley of Boston.

Congressmen Join the Fight.

Congressman Andrew J. Peters of the Eleventh, James M. Curley of the Tenth and Congressman William H. Wilder of the Boston City Council.

In the midst of an exciting session at Washington, to write to the AMERICAN in support of the movement. From New Hampshire came another hearty support from former United States Senator William E. Chandler, Speaker of the House Frank A. Musgrove and such progressive leaders of the people as Edmund S. Cook and Former Justice James W. Remick.

Reason for the Campaign.

The reason for this great campaign was the declaration in this newspaper that the Grand Trunk Railway could come to Boston "if the people want it" here: The Grand Trunk is close to Boston already. Its terminals beside heads were said to be doubtful of a real desire to have their system establish a terminal here.

The Boston AMERICAN repeated this message to the people, calling upon them to express their sentiments. The response was immediate and tremendous. This newspaper has no hesitancy in saying that before many days have elapsed it will bring to the door of the Grand Trunk directorate the names and addresses of 100,000 New Englanders who want the Grand Trunk for Boston.

The Grand Trunk is one of the greatest railway systems in existence. With the completion of construction now in progress it will span the North American continent from Moncton to Prince Rupert.

From all sides the Grand Trunk approaches Boston. It is well established at Portland, crossing northern New Hampshire and serving the western border of the State of Maine.

It controls the Central Vermont Railroad, most powerful of all the lines in the Green Mountain State, and on the direct line from Montreal to Boston comes as near as White River Junction.

Leasing the New London & Northern, the Grand Trunk is established in Massachusetts at Palmer. It has received from the Massachusetts Board of Railroad Commissioners a "certificate of exigency" authorizing the construction of a line from Palmer across Southeastern Massachusetts to the Rhode Island line at Blackstone. Under the name of the "Southern New England" the Grand Trunk will build from Palmer to Providence.

People Want the Road.

Close to Boston at Portland, White River Junction, Palmer and Providence, the complete, through the AMERICAN, are inviting the Grand Trunk to establish a terminal in the metropolis of New England.

Since the opening of this campaign to get the Grand Trunk for Boston a most interesting development has taken place. It has officially been admitted that the New York, New Haven & Hartford controls the Boston & Albany railroad. You will recall that this admission was made early in the week.

GRAND TRUNK IS ONE OF THE BIG RAILROADS OF THIS CONTINENT

What the coming of the Grand Trunk will mean to Boston is merely suggested when it is said that the total mileage of the Grand Trunk and its affiliated lines is not less than 10,000 miles.

The Grand Trunk has been in New England, in a comparatively modest way, for a number of years.

A controlling interest in the Central Vermont belongs to the Grand Trunk, which owns $2,185,000 worth of Central Vermont stock. The Central Vermont main line, from Windsor, Vt., to St. John, P. Q., is 377 miles long, the total mileage operated by the Central Vermont amounting to 596 miles.

Thus the Grand Trunk has the New London Northern, because the New London Northern—123 miles long—runs from New London, Ct., up to Brattleboro, Vt.—was leased to the Central Vermont in 1899 for a ninety-nine-year period.

But the original Grand Trunk system, reaching from Portland, Me., to Montreal, and on our Dominion Canada, until it comes back into the States again in northern Indiana, and at Chicago, amounts, as it leased lines to 3,536 miles of railroad. It covers the Great Lakes country and in one of the big trunk lines of that section.

There is, moreover, the Grand Trunk Pacific in process of construction, which will cover all of Canada from Moncton, New Brunswick, by way of Quebec and Winnipeg, Manitoba, and from Winnipeg to the Pacific at Prince Rupert in British Columbia. Eventually the Grand Trunk Pacific will push into the Yukon country in Alaska. Grand Trunk steamships will ply between Liverpool and the Canadian ports.

The New Haven is a branch line system, tapping New England from the Grand trunk lines.

The Grand Trunk Railway IS a trunk line. It can do things for the port of Boston and for all New England.

Credit Must Go to the American, Says Chairman Bancroft

Credit for the great interest and the public demand that brought about the petition must go to the Boston AMERICAN.

Recipe that Breaks a Cold in a Day and Cures Any Cough or Cough

"From your druggist get half ounce of Concentrated Pine compound and two ounces of Glycerine. Take these two ingredients home and put them into a half pint of good whiskey; shake well and use in doses of one to two teaspoonfuls after each meal and at bed time." Smaller doses to children according to age. But be sure to get only the genuine (Globe) Concentrated Pine. Each half ounce bottle comes in a sealed tin screw-top case. If your druggist does not have it he will quickly get it. Many millions are of large quantity and cheaper, but it is risky to experiment. This formula comes from a reliable doctor and is certain. This was first published here six years ago and local druggists say it has been in constant demand ever since.

BOLDUC DEATH CASE COMES UP TUESDAY

Charged with illegally treating Marie Bolduc, the little Manchester, N. H., mill operative, whose dead body was found in the home of Mrs. Jennie Shattuck, No. 47 Woodlawn street, Jamaica Plain, in December, five persons, four of them women, will be placed on trial Thursday before Judge Chase in the Suffolk Superior Court.

The five defendants are Annie M. Reed and Mary O'Neil, principals; Dr. John D. Ferguson, Mrs. Jennie Shattuck and Hattie M. Heslett. The last three are charged with being accessories. The defendants were first charged with murder, but after the police had investigated the case the charge was reduced to illegal treatment.

It was expected that District Attorney Pelletier would handle the prosecution, as he argued the case before the Grand Jury, but he has assigned it to Assistant District Attorney Lavelle, who will represent the Commonwealth. Attorneys John F. McDonald, John P. Feeney and John McCuig will appear for the defendants.

The body of Mary Boulduc was not found by the police until they were notified by the authorities of Manchester, who received their information from Dr. Ferguson. When Medical Examiner Leary notified his autopsy he declared that the girl had been dead several days, and that it had been illegally treated.

The developments came fast. A number of inspectors were assigned to the case. Within a few days five persons were under arrest.

TWO MEN LOST OFF FISHING SCHOONER

Left Vessel in Dories and It Is Believed They Perished in Freezing Weather.

PORTLAND, Me., Jan. 13.—With an American flag flying from her rigging the Portland fishing schooner Fanny Reed came into port this afternoon and the captain reported that two members of his crew, John Merino and a man known along the waterfront as Thomas Gibiet, had been lost at sea.

The other members of the crew of the Reed believe that Merino and Gibiet have perished as they had not been seen since early Friday morning when they left the vessel in their dories to set their trawls on the fishing grounds about six miles Southeast of the Cape Elizabeth lightship. When the other trawlers returned to the vessel in the afternoon they reported that they had not seen Merino and Gibiet since they left the vessel. All night long the Reed sailed back and forth burning torches while the crew anxiously scanned the sea for their shipmates.

The temperature was about ten degrees below zero and when the crew of the fishing schooner had failed to sight their comrades up to 2 o'clock this afternoon, they concluded that Merino and Gibiet must have perished through cold and exhaustion or been drowned by their dories capsizing unless they had been fortunate enough to be picked up by some passing vessel.

Just before the Reed arrived the Boston schooner Alma reached port towing from a stern to stern with ice. The vessel had been on a two-week's fishing trip to Brown's Banks, and several members of her crew had been frost-bitten while Captain Frank Eastey's nose had been frozen.

About the Time It Takes for a Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablet to Work on the Food and Bring Relief.

TRIAL PACKAGE SENT FREE.

There is no long wait between the time you take a Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablet and the feeling of relief it will bring to an overloaded stomach. It gets busy in a jiffy and quickly sets things to rights in that tired and disordered stomach. It goes right at the work of digesting the food it finds lodged there and in no time at all has things on the move—the gases cease forming, the breath is sweetened, the coating on the tongue disappears and you are no longer conscious that you even have a stomach.

That is one of the chief recommendations for Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets—that they don't take forever to accomplish the purpose for which you need them. It is just as if you put an extra stomach or two to work when yours needed help. You can't continually overload your stomach and expect it to always smile. It is going to get rebellious and sulky after awhile and refuse to go on being driven to do double work. You must rest it occasionally—not by starving and thereby weakening yourself physically—but by using a Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablet to do the work of digesting your food.

These tablets contain all the active elements of the natural stomach juices and will assist and emulsify digest food just the same as your gastric juices. And nothing could be more harmless than these tablets. They do not affect the system in any way—do not cure any ailment except as they digest food. Use them freely.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets are sold by all druggists everywhere. Price, 50 cents per box. A trial package will be sent if you will write F. A. Stuart Co., 150 Stuart Bldg., Marshall, Mich.

AS APOSTOLIC DELEGATE.

Servite Father L'Epicier Likely to Succeed Falconio.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Jan. 13.—Private advices from Rome state that Servite Father L'Epicier, just completing a delicate task in England, is to come to Washington as apostolic delegate in succession to Cardinal Falconio. The new delegate is young in years, but long in service and is highly regarded at the Vatican as one of the coming diplomatists of the Catholic Church.

THE GRIP IS HERE

Read What Victims of the Grip Say.

Bad Case of Grip.

Mrs. Gentry Gates, East Lake, Ala., writes: "I had a bad case of la grippe. I tried several kinds of medicine, but could get no relief.

"I tried Peruna and it cured me. I can safely say that it is a fine medicine. I have used it in our family often and find it to be good."

Systemic Catarrh Follows Grip.

Mrs. Jennie W. Cecil, Big Cabin, Oklahoma, formerly housekeeper for Indiana Reform School for Boys, writes:

"Six years ago I had la grippe, which was followed by systemic catarrh. The only thing I used was Peruna and Manalin, and I have been in better health the last three years than for years before.

After Effects of Grip.

Mr. K. Esveld, Company "B," 21st Michigan V. I., 39 Hermitage St., Grand Rapids, Mich., writes:

"I felt with advancing years that my vigor failed me and fear of poisoning my system with noxious medicines prevented my taking anything for it until noting the effect Peruna had on several of my comrades I made up my mind it would be good for me.

"I suffered for years from effects of the la grippe, which seemed to settle in my stomach and kidneys.

"Five bottles of Peruna made a new man of me. I wish that I had known of Peruna years ago, and then it would have saved me much suffering."

SODA TANK BLOWS UP, INJURES CLERK

Big Mirror Shattered and Customers Are Imperilled by Drug Store Explosion.

J. P. O'Connor, prescription clerk at the drug store of J. L. McGowan, No. 175 Cypress street, Brookline, was thrown to the floor unconscious and with both arms broken at the elbow, by explosion of a soda tank in the store at 10:30 last night.

The top of the tank went up from the soda fountain to the ceiling and re-bounded to the floor outside of the soda counter. Three men customers, standing in the middle of the floor, were shaken up.

A large plate glass mirror above the fountain was shattered and the top of the fountain front was blown out. J. L. McGowan, proprietor of the store, who was in the compounding room in back, was nearly stunned by the explosion.

The report was heard as far as Coolidge Corner and Chestnut Hill and brought about 400 people to the scene inside of fifteen minutes.

O'Connor is fifty years old and lives in Jamaica Plain. He went to the fountain to recharge the soda tank, which holds thirty gallons. For some reason, possibly the extreme cold, the tank exploded. Mr. O'Connor was standing directly against the front of the fountain at the time, with arms outstretched so that he could get at the tank. His arms were directly in the upward path of the explosion. Either the top of the tank, when it went up, or the mere force of the explosion, battered his arms with such force that they were broken. At the same time Mr. O'Connor was hurled backward to the floor, where he lay unconscious.

As soon as the other men recovered from the shock they took Mr. O'Connor to Dr. M. D. Miller's office, nearby. There he was sent to the City Hospital.

PIANO STOOL SWIM AS A BEAUTIFIER

Miss Annette Kellerman's System of Easy Indoor Exercise for Health.

NEW YORK, Jan. 13.—All any woman needs to become healthy and beautiful is persistence, a couple of books, say Ballet's "Physiology of Marriage" and Burton's "Anatomy of Melancoly," and a piano stool.

Such at least is the equipment of Miss Annette Kellermann, high diver and fancy lecturer. It is the opinion of the majority that Miss Kellermann has a beautiful figure, and she told an audience of women who assembled at the Winter Garden that she enjoys perfect health.

A strong will is necessary, Miss Kellermann says, to keep one to certain regular exercises and a beauty diet.

"Most woman exercise and diet for about three days, then they go back to eating six meals a day and taking no exercise at all," Miss Kellermann said. "And yet they wonder why they keep on getting fat.

"For a person who wants to reduce, meat is the worst possible food. I have not eaten any meat for three or four years. I live on a diet of vegetables and salad, with occasionally a little poultry, but never any red meat.

Two Meals a Day Enough.

"Two meals a day are quite enough; the first at noon, just a light repast, and the one real meal of the day at dinner time.

"A woman who wants to be beautiful and healthy should take a cup of hot water when she gets up in the morning. If she likes the taste of lemon she can squeeze a little lemon juice in the hot water unless she has a tendency to rheumatism—lemon is bad for rheumatism.

"When I say exercise and diet will make a woman beautiful and healthy," added Miss Kellermann, "I don't mean that she'll have a classical nose and gorgeous blonde hair. I mean a woman can acquire vitality, health, magnetism and symmetry."

"How?"

"By exercise. Swimming is, of course, the best exercise in the world for women, but I've got tired of talking about swimming in America. Here you are, a wonderful country of 90,000,000 people, and not ten per cent. of you know how to swim.

Advises Swimming Motions.

Then Miss Kellermann proceeded to illustrate how one may "swim indoors," and this demonstration brought the piano stool into play.

Lying prone across its polished surface, holding arms and legs in the air, she worked one leg, then the other, then both together; then her arms, then arms and legs all together in the familiar Fogilke one-two-three motion of swimming. This exercise is guaranteed to reduce the size of the hips.

To make the waist thinner, the diving Venus says nothing is better than jobbing the tips of the fingers high above the head, and then gradually touching the floor with them without bending the knees.

BIG MINERS' FIGHT.

Mitchell and Lewis Leading the Opposition Factions.

INDIANAPOLIS, Jan. 13.—With John Mitchell, once the miners' ideal, and Thomas L. Lewis leading the opposition factions, a big fight is on the program of the annual convention of the United Mine Workers of America, which begins here Tuesday. Charges that Lewis packed the 1911 convention to force the vote that repudiated the Civic Federation, of which Mitchell was a member, will be thrashed out. Mitchell and Lewis have been bitter enemies ever since the latter sprang into prominence in the organization's affairs. The wage scale is another issue which is expected to lead to dissensions.

FIREMEN KEPT BUSY.

Fight One Blaze and Have to Rush to Another.

After fighting a stubborn blaze in the Hood Rubber Company building on Bedford street last night, Captain Dolan and the men of Ladder Company No. 17 had just settled down for a rest when they were summoned for a fire in the furniture store of Louis Gold, No. 219 Harrison avenue, South End. Although the flames got a good start and threatened to spread to inflammable material adjoining, the men of the company succeeded in extinguishing the blaze before the arrival of the other apparatus.

May Form Fruit Company.

WAREHAM, Jan. 13.—The matter of starting a trust company here is being talked among the cranberry men and other merchants of the town. Many of the cranberry buyers, as well as growers, state that by a trust company they could have money forwarded them on loans much easier than by the present national banking system.

"MAN AND RELIGION" CAMPAIGN OPENED

Services Will be Held Today in More Than Four Hundred Churches.

The Men and Religion Forward Movement organized and opened its campaign in Greater Boston yesterday for religious betterment. Today services will be held in more than 400 churches, and this afternoon comes the formal start with two big mass meetings in Tremont Temple and the Tremont Theatre.

Yesterday the Committee of One Hundred, in charge of the work in the Greater Boston districts, held its preliminary meeting and outlined the campaign. Addresses were made by Fred B. Smith, evangelist and international secretary of the Y. M. C. A., and the Rev. Charles Steizle of the Labor Temple in New York city.

Following the organization of the committee, well attended rallies were held in each Greater Boston district last night. The leaders met with district church workers and mapped out the local campaigns.

The general committee voted yesterday to exclude women from the revival meetings, though in similar campaigns in the past women were allowed to attend all meetings. A special mothers' meeting has been arranged for next Friday afternoon.

The movement has secured $11,000 of the desired $15,000, to defray the expenses of the campaign during the coming week, according to the report the finance committee made yesterday.

Mr. Smith leads the meeting at 3:30 today in Tremont Temple. His address will be on "Men and Religion." Rev. Mr. Steizle leads at the Tremont Theatre and will speak on "The Church and Social Unrest." Tomorrow night there will be a banquet in Tremont Temple with tables for 1,000.

QUINN GIVES FLOWERS.

Floral Presents Are Sent to Hospitals.

"Honest" John Quinn, the new sheriff of Suffolk County, sent all the beautiful floral tokens that were presented to him by well-wishers to the "kiddies" at the Childrens' Hospital on Huntington avenue.

Flowers of nearly every description had filled his office for two days. The fragrance permeated the entire court house building in Pemberton Square. Everybody that came to visit "Sheriff John" remarked about the fragrance and beauty of the flowers. It pleased him greatly.

The sheriff is out of his office on Sunday, and having received a great deal of pleasure from the floral offerings, he thought of the children at he hospital. So he sent them over by messengers. The boys carrying the flowers looked like a forerunner to a floral fete, for such it was to the little ones of the hospital.

BETTER WATER SERVICE.

Mayor of Haverhill Asks Board to Spend $100,000.

HAVERHILL, Jan. 13.—Mayor Moulton today sent a letter to the Board of Water Commissioners asking them to spend $100,000 in improving the water service of the city. He asks them to build a pumping station at Millvale in order to save the annual waste of water over the dam at that point, and in order that it might uplift the supply at Kenoza Lake. He also asks for a reservoir at Crystal Lake, and for pipes under the Merrimack river to join the Haverhill and Bradford systems, that each might relieve the other in case of accident.

In return for this outlay of $100,000 the Mayor promises that the municipal council will equip the fire department with motor vehicles and will install a new fire alarm system. He also asks that the water system be extended to Ayer's Village and Ward Hill to the New Hampshire line, through the Ward 6 section.

JOY STREET POLICE TAKE EDDIE KEEVIN

"Eddie" Keevin, the well-known boxing promoter and president of the American Athletic Club, was arrested by officers of Division 3 at the club's rooms at No. 7 Green street last night and charged in five counts with promoting public boxing matches.

While the A. A. C. was holding its regular weekly boxing exhibition, Sergeants Burns and Sullivan, with three patrolmen from the Joy street station, shouldered their way into the rooms and placed Keevin under arrest. The police are said to have had no warrant.

Keevin was admitted to bail. The hours at the club went on. The club has arranged for another meeting next Thursday night, and will also fight in the courts to run to Lynde street.

2 CHILDREN SAVED FROM GARRET BLAZE

Two children were rescued early today during a fire that broke out in a garret room in the two-and-a-half-story frame dwelling at No. 29 Lynde street, Charlestown. The children, Daniel and John McLaughlin, aged seven and five years respectively, were asleep in the room next to the fire. They were carried to the street by their father, Daniel McLaughlin, and James Duffy, a roomer in the house. The damage amounted to $25.

A horse pulling Engine 27, on the way to the fire, slipped on the ice at the corner of Union street and Rutherford avenue. The animal recovered its feet after sliding twenty feet and continued on the run.

SEVERAL RESCUED IN SO. BOSTON FIRE

Two were rescued, unconscious from the effects of smoke, and three families were driven to the street scantily clad, as the result of a fire early today in the three-story frame tenement house at No. 46 West Third street, South Boston.

Smoke from fire that burned in the basement quickly filled the first floor, on which lived Patrick Crowley and his wife. Patrolman Moynihan and several pedestrians ran into the house and succeeded in taking out Mr. and Mrs. Crowley. The couple had become insensible.

Patrick Scanlon, his wife and one son were driven from the second floor of the burning building. Mr. and Mrs. John Feeney and six children and Mary Gould were among those forced to flee from the tenement house at No. 42 West Third street.

CAR KILLS MAN CROSSING TRACKS

An unidentified man was struck by an outward bound Benton street Cambridge car at midnight last night and suffered injuries from which he died at the Cambridge Relief Hospital shortly afterwards.

The car No. 1518, in charge of conductor E. L. Kempton and motorman P. Jankowski, was moving along Main afroad, Cambridge. When it neared Kenosh square the motorman noticed a man leaning against the wall of the approach to the new Cambridge subway. Just as the car reached this point the man attempted to cross the tracks and was struck by the car and hurled a distance of fifteen feet. He was picked up and placed on the car following, and taken as far as the Main street railroad crossing, where he was turned over to the Cambridge police.

LEISHER'S

A Demonstration

The first consideration in knitting and crocheting is the yarn. The success of the finished garment depends upon it. To obtain the desired results you must use the best yarns. Experienced knitters and crocheters know this and most of them use the Fleisher Yarns.

Mrs. Emerson, an expert demonstrator, will explain the use and superiority of Fleisher's Yarns

LONGSHOREMAN TELLS WHY WORKERS STRUCK

By PHILIP J. HALVESA.

"Let not ambition mock their useful toil,
Their homely joys, and destiny obscure;
Nor grandeur hear with a disdainful smile
The short and simple annals of the poor."

THIS is the story of a striking longshoreman. It was gathered at the rooms of the Longshoremen's Trade Council. Every word in it is vouched for by the officers of that organization. It is not the tale of an extremist, but the simple story of a man who has followed the calling in Boston for forty-two years.

I'll not tell you my name," he said in starting. "It wouldn't be safe. The bosses would never give me another day's work if I did. But I'll not tell an untruth, as the boys love to run big witness."

"No, no! He'll not lie to you," the "boys" echoed in. And these same "boys" evidently were in a position to speak with authority, for some of them were veterans in the service. Four among them, in fact, afterward said that they had taken part in the other big longshoremen's strike at this port some thirty years ago.

"I'm told that people wonder why we are striking," the old man continued. Were it not for his silvered hair one would not think of him as being old, his skin was so clear and the tense power of his swelling muscles so self-evident. "If they could only be brought to realize what hardships we have to endure, they'd wonder why we didn't go on strike years ago.

WORK THURSDAY TILL SATURDAY WITHOUT SLEEP.

"The steamship agents say we have been making from $15 to $40 a week. But we haven't. I've followed the calling in this port for forty years, and the highest week's wages I ever made was $20.42. About twenty-seven years ago that was.

"It's true that we have been getting 30 cents an hour on day work, 40 cents an hour for the first part of the night, and 50 cents for the last part of the night. It is also true that we have asked for 10 cents an hour increase, although our committee later offered to settle for a 5-cent raise.

"But, even so, a twelve-year-old schoolboy could figure that $40 a week or either rate would soon kill a man at our work, for wages ain't everything in the longshore business.

"When the Franconia of the Cunard line was here six weeks ago, I worked from 7 o'clock Thursday morning nearly till 2 o'clock Saturday afternoon, without getting so much as a wink of sleep.

"We handled 7,000 tons of cargo in that time, 1,800 tons coming in and 5,500 tons going out, so that she could sail on time. But even that wasn't a circumstance to what we have to do right along, if we want to hold our jobs.

THIRTY TONS OF FLOUR AN HOUR FOR 16 MEN.

"I've often worked fifty hours without undressing, with only two hours off for breakfast, two hours for supper and an hour for the midday meal. It's a common thing for us to work a thirty-hour shift, and this is the way we work.

"On copper ore (pyrites), shale, clay and a good many other kinds of cargo, we have to handle sixty tons an hour with a gang of sixteen men. Allowing for hauls, when working a thirty-hour shift, this means that every man in the gang has to handle one hundred tons of cargo between sleeps, on a rush job.

"Thirty tons of flour an hour is the sixteen-man gang stunt for Boston longshoremen when loading a vessel, and the eight men in the hold have to carry every bag of it on their backs, at that.

"These bags of flour weigh 280 pounds each. Six men track them to the hatchway, while a winchman and hatchman complet, the deck crew. The other eight men in the gang work in the hold.

"Two of the men in the hold stand on the 'stool' and lift the 280-pound bags on to the other men's backs. They are then carried away from the hatchway and piled up six tiers high. It's fearful work.

"A box of bacon weighs 500 pounds. The hourly stunt set for a gang of men in loading this cargo is 120 boxes, or 56,000 pounds of bacon an hour. And it's a common thing for the trackmen to have to walk 1,200 feet when making each trip, 600 feet with a load and 600 feet with an empty truck.

35 TONS OF STEEL HANDLED IN AN HOUR

"One hundred and twenty-five loads of sugar, with four 100-pound bags to a load, is the minimum hourly stunt for a gang of Boston longshoremen. In other words, when unloading a sugar vessel, every hold-man has to carry 20,313 pounds of sugar on his back every hour he is doing sugar, if he wants to hold his job.

"When we are loading steel, which comes in pieces fifteen feet long and of varying widths and thicknesses, we have to handle an average of thirty-five tons an hour, and—

"Ain't you going to say anything about the refrigerator work and the bleaching powder?" interrupted another gray-haired veteran. His eyes grew and great breadth of shoulder gave mute evidence of the laborious nature of his calling. "Ain't you going to——"

"I am! But I'm not going to give you a chance to get your name in the Sunday AMERICAN by telling the man how you hooked on to nine kegs of bleaching powder at $1 a keg," retorted the first veteran with withering scorn, mindful of the fact that this interruption had accomplished the desired result. (Bleaching powder is chloride of lime.)

"I've known twenty strong men who died from the effects of working among the fumes of bleaching powder cargo," he continued. "It's like committing suicide to even put your head inside the hold when the hatches are first opened, with this kind of cargo aboard.

"The deadly fumes of this chemical have been known to blind men in less than an hour. It is a common thing to see them bleeding at the nose and fainting. I've known men who bled at the ears, and sometimes the blood would ooze out of their eyes before they could be rescued, while at work in the hold of a ship loaded with bleaching powder.

"FROZEN WORK WORSE THAN BLEACHING POWDER."

"Then there is the 'frozen work,' following a load with on general cargo on a Summer's day. It some respects, that's worse than unloading bleaching powder.

"It is an every day occurrence, in the heated season, for us to have to work in a hole that records from 80 to 100 degrees of heat, and then, when reeking with perspiration, to be compelled to go to work in the refrigerating room, where it is only fourteen degrees above zero.

"Some of the people who think that thirty-five cents an hour is too much money to pay for longshore work ought to put in a few days on frozen work—after getting roasted in the hold loading general cargo.

"Our work is heavy, that we can't wear very much clothing, even in the Winter time, and we only wear an undershirt and a pair of overalls in the Summer.

"So you can imagine what tortures we have to endure when, our clothes wet through with perspiration, we go on frozen work under such conditions.

"And you must bear in mind that for all this we don't get more than $400 a year on the average, for while 50 cents an hour looks like big wages to the ordinary workingman, it must be remembered that a longshoreman in Boston has to lose a lot of time waiting for his ship to come in.

300 AFTER 64 JOBS BESIEGE THE FOREMAN.

"I've seen 300 men lined around a foreman, all looking for a job in the dull season, when sixty-four was known to be the limit of his gang. The steamship agents don't mention that in their open letter to the public when making mention of the strike.

"Imagine, if you can, a foreman standing in a circle of out-of-work men, only sixty-four of whom can by any chance hope to get a job, and no other ship due in port for another two weeks.

"It isn't so bad in the rush season, for then an odd man can get work when there's two jobs for every man who is idle, providing he can handle 100 tons of cargo ore between sleeps. But it is different when business is dull, and there are four idle men for every vacant job.

"I have read of the old-time slave markets of the South, where the masters used to extoll the value of their human cattle's while selling them off to the highest bidders. The longshoremen can go this one better in the dull season, for they make their own market and act as their own auctioneers in this instance.

"The foreman always stands in the centre of the circle, and as fast as he picks a man out that man's name is checked off by a timekeeper. And somehow, he never seems to pick out a man with gray hair, for we old men can't even sell ourselves in the Summer time.

MEN ARE DOCKED FOR TIME ON THE HATCHES.

"Then there is the hatch-docking evil to contend with at all seasons of the year. For it doesn't matter how hard we work, only four boldmen in a gang can pull off a full day's pay under any combination of circumstances.

"The unjustness of this docking, or fining, becomes the more evident when it is understood that almost every steamship line making Boston a port of entry docks its longshoremen a half-hour's pay every day for the time it takes to open and close the hatches. And that despite the fact that it only takes from five to six minutes to uncover or replace the hatches in question.

"It is thirty years since there has been a raise in wages given longshoremen in this port. The cost of living has more than doubled in that time, and it is still going up.

"We work harder to-day than we ever did. The purchasing power of a dollar is lower than ever before. We must have more money if we are going to live properly.

"The man who handles 100 tons of cargo between sleeps is worth more than 20 cents an hour, especially when he has so much broken time to contend with. And I'll never vote to call this strike off until we get it."

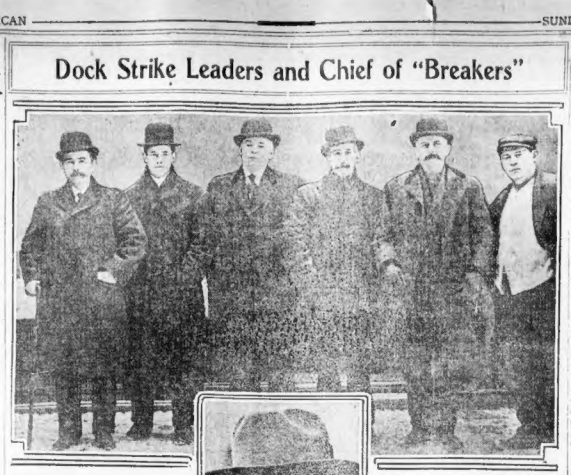
Dock Strike Leaders and Chief of "Breakers"



H. M BOWEN

STRIKE THREAT TO TIE UP THE MYSTIC DOCKS

Three thousand men still are out in the longshoremen's strike, and threats are made to call out 200 additional freight handlers at the Mystic docks of the Boston & Maine to-morrow morning.

The freight handlers at the Mystic docks so far have resisted all efforts to induce them to join the strike, although members of the same Knights of Labor Assembly as the men on the Hoosac Tunnel docks, the greater number of whom joined the general strike yesterday.

Big Meeting To-day.

Boston & Maine Freight Handlers' Assembly No. 5572, Knights of Labor, final, by which these men hold membership with 1,000 other Boston & Maine freight handlers, meet at Hibernian Hall, Charlestown, this afternoon. Final decision will be taken at this meeting on the points at issue. A general tie-up of the Mystic docks is said to be sure to follow, although this is denied by Michael White, the retiring master workman.

Predictions that the longshoremen at New York will refuse to unload any vessels diverted from this port were made by the strikers at Boughton building last night. That he said so is indicated by the visit of Walter J. Hall of New York, general vice-president of the International Longshoremen's Union, the American Federation of Labor organization.

Says Strike Is Justified.

"The union longshoremen of New York are heartily in sympathy with the striking longshoremen of Boston," Mr Holt declared when leaving for his home in New York last night. "I have investigated the situation thoroughly during my two-day stay in this city and am convinced that the strike is at this port is a justifiable one."

He refused to state, however, whether a formal strike order would issue in New York if vessels were diverted to that port in an endeavor to break the Boston strike, declaring that the rank and file would answer that question when the proper time came.

The 400 Boston & Albany freight handlers at the Grand Junction are out. Fully 100 of the 1,200 freight handlers usually employed at the Hoosac Tunnel docks also are out. Seventy-five knights of the allied carpenters' local are also of the strikers yesterday, and not one of section men reported at work. The 2,500 longshoremen who went out eight days ago, and to whom only rooms have been opened for the strikers by the officers of their different organizations at Hayre street, East Boston, and Abbottsford Hall, Cottage street, Charlestown. The best of order obtains among the men, their time being passed at these rooms in games, entertainments and social intercourses.

In addition to the meeting of the Boston & Maine freight handlers, Provident Longshoremen's Club, O'Connell Assembly, Eureka Assembly, Transatlantic Workers' Assembly, Boston & Albany Freight Clerks' Assembly, and the New Haven Freight Clerks' Assembly will hold meetings to-day.

Following the meeting of the Longshoremen's District Council at Roughan Hall, Charlestown, last night, the ultimate winning of their week-old strike confidently was foretold.

Confident of Success.

"We will win this strike without losing a member," the press committee stated. "It has been gradually accumulating more for strikebreakers, demurrage and broken-contract bonuses to date than it would have paid the small increase in wages asked for by our unions for years to come.

"The much-boasted-of strike breakers imported from New York and other cities are not worth their salt. Their 'loading' of ships prove it takes at least ten of them to do the work that a regular longshoreman would do, and the regular men only ask for straight union wages.

"We haven't any fear of the outcome, and are confident that our strike will be won in a few days now."

While the steamship agents and stevedores say that they are confident of winning and will continue the fight at whatever cost, the price they are paying for holding out is staggering.

There were but nine fifteen ships in port, which, with two exceptions, are from two days to a week overdue in sailing. There are twelve more ships either overdue or due to-day and to-morrow, which will make twenty-six in port. Steamship men say that the cost of idle ships amounts to $2000 a day. Add to this the cost of imported strike-breakers at $5 each per day and the incidental expenses and it runs into money quickly.

Steamships Held Up.

The work that is being done by the strikebreakers is insufficient to keep the ships moving. During the nine days that the strike has been in progress only one ship that was loaded by strikebreakers has left port, and this ship, the Cumbrian, for London, the crew worked for two days and the strikebreakers for five days, putting in her outward cargo. Her inward cargo was discharged before the strike.

The Allen liner Ionian, loaded by strikebreakers, was due to leave port last Thursday and will probably get away to-day.

Several ships that have been lying at their piers for several days still have nearly their entire cargo still in their holds and very little progress is being made on them.

UNUSUAL APPEAL FOR LIFE OF PHELPS; FARMER DEFENDS SLAYER SENTENCED TO CHAIR

Hiram Fairman, a very successful tobacco farmer at North Hadley, in Hampshire County, is the author of a most unusual letter to the Sunday AMERICAN protesting against the execution of Silas Phelps.

Phelps is a prisoner in the death house at Charlestown. He is thirty-seven years old. He has been condemned to die. He has been granted a stay by Governor Foss, who hopes to have the members of the Executive Council see the Phelps case as he sees it and give their consent to a commutation of Phelps's sentence to life imprisonment.

Now comes Hiram Fairmen to say a few words about the case. Fairman says that:

If Phelps had had his Readsboro (Vt.) trouble in a city, a policeman would have stepped up to him in broad daylight to arrest him for assault.

Haskins, without a warrant, descended upon the Phelps home with an armed posse at 3 o'clock in the morning.

Among the men in Franklin County who ask for the execution of Phelps are some who, years ago, tried to rob Fairman of his reputation.

Pension for Haskins's Widow.

"Away up on the hills a young woman with a flock of small children around her is waiting." This is young Mrs. Phelps.

Moreover—the little town in the Phelps-Haskins story, is situated in the northwestern corner of Franklin County, bordering the State of Vermont and the County of Rockingham. The population of the township is 240, living mostly in two small villages. The district is served by a little barrow gauge railway.

Haskins, who started out from Charlemont, 122 miles west of Boston, to get Phelps—started some time after midnight in answer to a telephone message from Vermont—was fifty-six years old and had been a Franklin County deputy sheriff for seventeen years.

This is Mr. Fairman's letter about the men in the case, printed exactly as it comes to the Sunday AMERICAN:

By HIRAM FAIRMAN.

I wish to, through the medium of your paper, state the other side of the Phelps case. There has been gone forth through the press and otherwise that "a sheriff, in the small hours of the night, bravely met his adversary in that lonely shack on the mountainside while in the faithful performance of his duty."

Not so, and if you follow this through, I think you will agree with me. Peace be to Haskins' ashes, but I do not believe in using the chimerical virtues of a dead man as a weapon to slay the living. I never met Phelps, but was a neighbor to and knew Haskins well.

Four years ago, when living at East Charlemont, I leased some sheep from the Farm Stock Company of Greenfield, and one morning I found a hound running my sheep on my hilly pasture and shot him. Just before the trial that ensued from it I met Sheriff Haskins and told him about it. Told him that the dog when shot was within twenty feet of a bunch of sheep, and as the sheep swept by me I shot him. The dog rolled to my feet, spattering my shoes with blood.

Now you can imagine my surprise and disgust at the trial to see Sheriff Haskins as a witness for the dog men, and here is the lawyer's question and Haskins's answer relating to the above:

"They Didn't Ask Me."

Lawyer—What did Mr. Fairman tell you about shooting the dog?

Haskins—He told me the dog came up to him and he shot him.

I met Haskins the next day and we had words, and after we had cooled down a bit I said: "Didn't I tell you before the trial trut that dog was in full cry behind a bunch of sheep when I shot him?" "Yes," said Haskins. "Well, why didn't you tell it at the trial?" "They didn't ask me," he made answer. There you have the man.

I can name you case after case where no would, after serving a writ on some unfortunate, bring in evidence and the same line as the above. Can you wonder that he made enemies.

Now, Phelps had a scuffle in that mill office, then he met the same two men on the street afterwards and Phelps says they had words and they pitched into him and he got the worst and went home. If this had happened in a city, the coroner would have gone to Phelps's home in broad daylight and arrested him. A district judge would probably have fined him for assault.

What did Haskins do? Take his warrant and go like a man to Phelps with it? No, without any warrant collected a crowd of Phelps's enemies and at 3 o'clock in the morning battered in door down and crowded into the little kitchen.

Phelps's religious and educational advantages had been few, and admitting that his ideas are not quite up to the general standard as to judgment and he not quite up to the excitement of the day incident, and seeing those familiar faces there to do him, with weapons in their hands, one does not wonder at his shooting. God help the mob that try to enter my door at 2 o'clock in the morning without a warrant!

"But," you say, "how about those Franklin County citizens that attended that hearing and requested Phelps's life should be taken?" Let me tell you who they were. Phelps's religious and educational advantages had been few, and admitting that his ideas are not quite up to the general standard as to judgment and he not quite up to the excitement of the day incident, and seeing those familiar faces there to do him, with weapons in their hands, one does not wonder at his shooting. God help the mob that try to enter my door at 2 o'clock in the morning without a warrant!

"But," you say, "how about those Franklin County citizens that attended that hearing and requested Phelps's life should be taken?" Let me tell you who they were. Phelps's neighbors and acquaintances, men that knew him best, those who had lived in the same town with him for years, men that knew his family history, men that knew his wife before her marriage to Phelps, men that knew the circumstances leading up to the shooting, men that knew the character of the men he shot, men that knew the character of the men that were after him, men that knew the character of the men that were after his wife, men that knew the character of the men that were after his property, men that knew the character of the men that were after his life, men that knew the character of the men that were after his reputation, men that knew the character of the men that were after his home, men that knew the character of the men that were after his children, men that knew the character of the men that were after his wife's reputation. Yes, and a pension has been given for Haskins' widow in California won't do. Haskins left property. She was his second wife and younger than he was. They had been married but a short time and she has no children to provide for. But when those stand side by side, they may not quite a show of fireworks. Now how about the other side?

"Away up on those hills a young woman with a flock of small children around her is waiting. Going without the necessities of life, wearing the cheaper clothing for herself and children, wanting to go to see her husband before his death but without a penny to pay her transportation and with hardly a friend on earth.

BROOKLINE GIRL MAY WIN MILLIONS

"Lucky" Baldwin Will Case to Be Decided in California This Week.

Eighteen-year-old Anita Turnbull Baldwin of Brookline will know this week, maybe before to-morrow night, whether she is adjudged the rightful heiress to a share of $2,500,000 in the $30,000 estate of E. J. ("Lucky") Baldwin.

The Supreme Judicial Court of California is to hand down a decree for or against the girl's claim that she is entitled, as a daughter of "Lucky" Baldwin, to that share in his estate.

In anticipation of the decree she has signed a contract whereby her attorneys, Isadore Dockweiler, A. W. Hutton, Gesner Williams, Walter B. Grant and W. H. McCorkle will receive half the fortune should the court rule in her favor.

Lawyers Supplied Money.

Of her lawyers, three reside in Los Angeles, Grant in Boston and McCorkle in New York, and upon the court's action will depend whether these attorneys will have spent months of labor without reward and the girl an equal time and expense as to whether her status as a daughter of "Lucky" Baldwin would be established.

Decision is expected this week in the suit of Anita Turnbull Baldwin against the estate of "Lucky" Baldwin, who left $30,000,000. Her share may amount to $2,500,000.

At the time when the action to break the will was started Leo J. Maguire was appointed the girl's guardian. The attorney's, believing the girl a legitimate heir advanced the money to put her claim before the court. Besides the expenses of the trial itself, the lawyers have also furnished the money for several trips from Boston to the coast that Mrs. Turnbull and her daughter have been forced to make. The young girl was eighteen on December 7 and her court upon becoming of age was to sign the contract to which her mother, Mrs. Turnbull added her name.

Contest Over Baldwin's Will.

The contest over the "Lucky" Baldwin millions started nearly two years ago, when the estate was about to be distributed. Through her guardian the girl alleged that "Lucky" Baldwin had entered into a marriage with her mother, who did not know until a short time before the hearing of the contest that the marriage was invalid. Mr. Baldwin having another wife living at the time. Upon this discovery the mother left Baldwin and later brought suit in California courts against him for damages. It was during the trial that the sister of the complainant became so angered with Baldwin, who continued to smile throughout the trial, that she aimed a revolver at him and shot him. The wound was slight.

The evidence at that time showed that for months after her baby's birth Mrs. Turnbull had to skimp along without even the bare necessities of life. At the time she kept this secret of her life from her daughter until shortly after the girl accidentally discovered it herself.

Mrs. Turnbull's Claims.

Mrs. Turnbull claims that she lived as Baldwin's wife and was introduced by him as his wife, and for this reason claimed a share in the estate for her child, with whom she had suffered all sorts of privations after Baldwin deserted her.

In his will Mr. Baldwin left each of his daughters $11,000,000, his widow $100,000 and a Mrs. Selby, a daughter of whom nothing is said, until this time, been left $50,000. The total of the estate was estimated to be somewhere above $30,000,000.

When the case was first brought to court Mrs. Baldwin told a most dramatic story of her meeting with Baldwin, of the birth of her daughter, and the subsequent privations and her charm when the girl discovered the true story, a few days after Baldwin died.

"Anita," she said, "saw by the Eastern papers that I had a child; she was curious about her age, and then she saw it corresponded with hers; she began to think; she began to understand why reporters had been besieging us the day after 'Lucky' Baldwin died. She wondered why she had never visited her father's grave, and why she had never met any of her relatives. Then she knew.

"To my dying day I shall never forget the look on her face when I re-entered the room; she seemed to have grown from a baby into a woman.

"Mama," she cried, why didn't you tell me? Why didn't you tell me?"

"I told him in his father," she said, pointing to an artist in a paper, "my self, my very own father, and all these days I have longed so to have a father of my own; and now he is dead!"

BRITAIN FEARS A GREAT LABOR WAR

Every Resource of Nation Used to Prevent Strike of 900,000 Miners.

LONDON, Jan. 13.—Hopes of the government that a vast industrial war can be averted in England are slowly fading and well informed attaches of the Home Office admitted to-day that only the most delicate handling of the situation could prevent a conflict that would cost hundreds of millions of dollars. The coming week is expected to bring a crisis.

Every resource of the nation will be used to prevent a strike of the 900,000 miners, who are anxious for a test of strength between themselves and their employers. Incomplete returns pouring in at labor headquarters show that in England, Scotland and Wales the vote on the walkout is overwhelming.

The miners are inflamed by the textile trade lockout and a cry is going up from other unions that there will never be such a favorable opportunity to combine their resources and compel the payment of a living wage. The high cost of living is an issue here as well as in America.

Conferences between Sir George R. Askwith, of the government board of trade and representatives of textile employers and employes in an attempt to end the Lancashire lockout which is affecting nearly 1,000,000 men and women will be resumed on Monday, but there is little likelihood that the negotiations will be crowned with success.

The Employers Federation Association has served notice that while they are willing to make some concessions to the operatives, they will stand out firm for the open shop principle. The employes have adopted an attitude just as stubborn.

GABB SHOCKS LANDLORD.

Grecian Robes of Raymond Duncan Not Appreciated in Paris.

PARIS, Jan. 13.—Raymond Duncan, the American exponent of Grecian lack of garb appeared in court to-day on a warrant secured by his landlord who objected to the classic attire. His case was dismissed because he had moved from his former apartments.

Mr. Duncan was accompanied by a score of his pupils and all wore the Grecian robes. The Republican Guards were so shocked that for a time they refused to admit the half-clad troop to the court room.

Mr. Duncan declares he will leave Paris for a city imbued with more appreciation of the classic.

Governor Foss will be among the some 600 men.

Addresses will be made by the Rev. Father Hayes, C. S.S. R., rector of the church; Frederick J. Donovan, Joseph Foss, Mayor Fitzgerald, David I. Walsh of Clinton, recently Democratic candidate for Lieutenant-Governor, Dudley Field Malone of New York.

Besides the speeches there will be singing and a Smith & Dinneville pic sented by well-known actors.

RE-ARRESTED IN COURT.

C. E. Brown, Former Banker, Taken for Lowell Police.

After being found guilty of obtaining money on a worthless check and his case being placed on file by Judge Perkins in the Brookline court, Charles E. Brown, once a prominent Boston broker, was re-arrested for the Lowell police yesterday. Judge Perkins found Brown guilty of having obtained money from Alfred J. Bayman, a Brookline druggist, on a false check for twenty dollars. He then placed the case on file. Brown was about to leave the courtroom Sergeant Rutherford of Brookline arrested him on a warrant sent by the Lowell police.

EIGHT GOO GOOS IN NEW CITY COUNCIL

So Tim Buckley Will Vote for a Regular Democrat, and That's Himself.

Councilman-elect John A. Coulthurst will be a candidate for President of the City Council for 1912 if he accepts the advice of his friends who have already started a boom in his behalf.

As the candidate who ran on a distinctly anti-Fitzgerald platform, voicing slightly from the stump the arguments of those who were opposed to the Mayor and his policies, his friends feel that he should be recognized by a City Council that has shown new anxiety for a test of strength in any way to the Fitzgerald machine.

Councilman John J. Attridge wants the place and it is known that President Weeter L. Collins would not turn the cold shoulder to a second term proposition, if he saw that it is a possibility. Councilman Walter Ballantyne who headed the ticket on last Tuesday would also like to wield the gavel again and while he does not point to the fact that he led the poll on last Tuesday as an argument for his choice, his friends who are not quite as modest, urge this as a very potent reason why he is the logical leader of the body for 1912.

There will be eight Municipal League and Good Government members in the next City Council. Councilman Timothy J. Buckley, who was elected last year for a three-year term, will be the only representative of the Democratic city machine. Councilman Buckley can be depended upon to pull the chestnuts out of the fire for a regular Democrat, however as the open shop Democrat. The employes have any said among the C. M. L. Councilmen that will vote for himself for the honor from the first to the last ballot. Councilman Attridge was believed to be in the pole in the race for the presiding officer's chair but the entry of Coulthurst may complicate matters and bring about a deadlock. Councilmen Hale, Smith, Keefe and McDonald do not seek the honor but their choice for leader is said to be divided among candidates and there is a probability of the contest being long drawn out. Councilman Ballantyne as senior in age of the body will preside over the 1912 sessions until a permanent presiding officer is chosen.

A CHARITY BALL.

Will Be Held Under St. Anthony's Church Auspices Monday Night.

A charity ball will be held on Monday evening under the auspices of St. Anthony's Church of Allston, in Roddy Hall, North Brighton. The proceeds will be given to the Vincent de Paul Society for the continuance of the extensive work outlined for the seven weather, which creates a heavy demand for supplies and clothing for the poor of the parish. A large attendance is expected, and an enjoyable evening anticipated by the parishioners.

BELIEVE KELIHER'S CHANCES ARE SLIM

Friends Think He Must Serve Sentence, Having No Money for Further Appeal.

The chances of William J. ("Big Bill") Keliher escaping the eighteen-year sentence passed on him for his complicity in the wrecking of the National City Bank of Cambridge are very slim, according to the most optimistic friends of the defendant.

"Big Bill" is now in the East Cambridge jail. In the decision handed down by the Circuit Court of Appeals, confirming his sentence, it was provided that Keliher may be taken for re-sentence before the District Court within sixty days.

When Keliher is re-arraigned it may be that the eleven months that he has spent in the East Cambridge jail will be deducted from the original sentence, but there is no assurance of that.

All of Keliher's money is gone and there are no finances to carry the case to the United States Supreme Court, even if his lawyers deemed that step expedient.

The fact that the Circuit Court of Appeals declared that Keliher was just as guilty as though he had put his own hand in the till of the bank and had taken the money which he helped George W. Coleman dissipate, would seem to show that Keliher's hope for any help in the courts is futile.

Bostonian Society Meeting.

The Bostonian Society will hold its annual election in the Council Chamber, Old State House, on Monday, January 16, at 3 p. m. James J. McGinley will read a paper entitled "The Latin Grammar School of Boston, England."

BABY'S HEAD ITCHED, SO COULD NOT SLEEP

Sores Began to Come on Cheeks. Were Raw as Could Be. Would Scratch Till They Bled. Used Cuticura Soap and Ointment. In 6 Weeks Baby Well as Ever.

115 Clark St., Clinton, Mass. — "My babies are twin boys and at the age of three months one of them began to have sores on his head which looked like little pimples. In a few days it was quite raw and swollen. I tried all I thought was good for humors till it began to appear on his two cheeks. They were as raw as could be and the head one car it was almost out through. Baby would scratch his cheeks till they bled and many nights I had to sit up hours forth and rub his head with my hand, for it would itch so he could not sleep.

"The doctor told me it was eczema. I had heard lots about Cuticura Soap and Cuticura Ointment, so I sent for a sample and I found on the fourth day baby slept better and the swelling was gone. The water no longer ran from his head, and he made no attempt to scratch. So I bought a cake of Cuticura Soap and a box of Cuticura Ointment and in six weeks' time baby was as well as ever.

"His head was covered with sores I had to cut his hair close to his head. Now his hair has grown long and he has had no more sores. If every mother feels as I did to see their little ones suffer and try to rub the little head on the pillow with some relief, they will try the Cuticura Soap and Ointment. I used two cakes of Cuticura Soap and three boxes of Cuticura Ointment to cure baby." (Signed) Mrs. John Brooks, Nov. 17, 1911.

Cuticura Soap and Cuticura Ointment are sold by druggists and dealers throughout the world. Liberal sample of each mailed free, with 32-p. book. Address, "Cuticura," Dept. T, Boston. Tender-faced men should shave with Cuticura Soap Shaving Stick.

ANNOUNCEMENT TO OUR WOMEN PATRONS

The sale at COES & YOUNG'S exclusive men's shoe shop, at 20 SCHOOL STREET—occasioned by the flooding of the entire store from the tenants above, on last Sunday—interfered with the plans for a sale in our women's store, at 11 TEMPLE PLACE.

The enormous rush of men to our store on Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday, not only forced us to borrow salesmen from our Temple Place store and our Harvard Square Branch, but required the service of three officers from Station 2 to assist in giving proper and orderly attention to patrons.

The fact that our "Flood Sale"—all last week—was the greatest sale of men's high-grade shoes ever conducted in America, from every standpoint, is merely an indication of the reputation borne by shoes bearing the stamp of COES & YOUNG CO.

We place on sale—TO-MORROW MORNING AT 8:30—about 10,000 pairs of COES & YOUNG CO.'S high-grade women's shoes—marked much lower than the values warrant.

NEW ENGLAND ARMY TO INVADE NEW YORK

WASHINGTON, Jan. 13.—New York State National Guardsmen, with those of New Jersey, next Summer will repel an invasion of that State by troops from Massachusetts, Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont and Connecticut, according to the annual report of Adjutant General Verbeck, which was transmitted to Governor Dix to-day.

The New York and New Jersey troops will be mobilized somewhere in Westchester county on the border of Connecticut, says the report, but the theatre of the mimic war probably will be in Connecticut. General Verbeck declares that it is not for experiment nor alone for instruction that the mobilization problems are designed, but that there seems "an absolute and immediate necessity of having in this office a complete scheme of mobilization."

The report refers to the fact that serious criticisms of the National Guard were made at the time of the manoeuvres in Massachusetts in 1909, "because the endurance and limitations of the National Guard were not considered or understood by the War Department," and declares that all future manoeuvres will be based upon the "needs and desires of the National Guard after careful study and measurement of the endurance and experience of the troops."

STUDENTS ARE BARRED.

Amherst Boys Didn't See Rose Pinonof Swim.

AMHERST, Jan. 13.—Rose Pitonof, long-distance swimmer, gave an exhibition in Pratt Natatorium, Amherst College, before members of the faculty and their wives. The student body was barred from the exhibition. One hundred of them swarmed about the door and tried to look in the frosted windows, but admittance was denied them.

Cartridge in Appendix.

LAWRENCEBURG, Ind., Jan. 13.—Benjamin Kremmer, nineteen years old, stricken with appendicitis while on a hunting trip, died during an operation to-day, and the surgeons found a loaded cartridge in his appendix, which was distended to eleven inches in length. Kremmer hunted rabbits with a rifle, and it is supposed he held a cartridge in his mouth for quick reloading and swallowed it.

CUMMINS ABOUT TO ANNOUNCE CANDIDACY

This Means That La Follette Will Have No Chance of Nomination.

By JAMES J. MONTAGUE.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 13.—Indications that Senator La Follette will have to take the advice given him at the Jackson Day banquet by William R. Hearst and get out of the Republican party are multiplying every day.

The Republicans do not want La Follette and will not have him.

The man whom he counted on most for support was Senator Albert J. Cummins of Iowa, but Cummins is now on the point of announcing his own candidacy, an action which will drive the last spike into the already shrouded and coffined hopes of the Wisconsin leader.

Cummins has just got back from a political old-home week at Des Moines. He talked over with all the boys in a long series of confidences and came away convinced that Iowa was not for La Follette and would never come to the convention tied up by La Follette pledges.

Iowa will instruct for Cummins, if Cummins is willing, and may instruct for Roosevelt if Cummins thrusts personal ambition behind him. But the Hawkeye State will never instruct for La Follette, and that's all there is to it.

When this news reached La Follette it did not do much toward bringing the breach that has been rapidly widening between the two western progressiv Senators. La Follette still had hopes even after the Roosevelt talk was started here three weeks ago. He believed it would be a good scheme to sit tight and let Roosevelt blow up, and he and his friends used good judgment in talking very little of the La Follette candidacy during these troublous days.

But now that the Roosevelt matter is at least quiescent and La Follette is ready for another dash at the throne, along comes Cummins and stands squarely in his way.

This settles La Follette. He can't get in anywhere in his own party. Republicans have come to realize that they do not belong to a progressive party, that they don't want to subscribe to a progressive platform, and that they will never nominate a progressive candidate. Roosevelt they regard as progressive in words only, and they know they are in no danger of being called progressive if they nominate him.

La Follette is thus left without a party. There is still time for him to become a Democrat if he chooses: but all hope of honor in his own party is now lost.

BRANDEIS SHARPLY SCORES STEEL TRUST

distinctly a constructive policy. It is the policy of development as distinguished from the destructive policy of private monopoly, which has always in the past, and must always in the future, paralyze individual effort and initiative and deaden enterprise. It is asserted that to persist in the disintegration of existing unlawful trusts is to prusue a policy of destruction. No statement could be more misleading. Progress demands that we remove the obstacles in the path of progess. Business progress demands that the industrial advance be unobstructed; and private monopoly is the most serious obstacle to best development in business.

Implication Is False.

"One has heard of late with much reiteration the phrases "You can't make people compete by law;" "Artificial competition is undesirable."

"These are truisms, but their implication is false. The suggestion is not that traders be compelled to compete, but that they be prevented from killing competition. Equally misleading is the phrase, 'Natural monopolies should not be interfered with.' There are no natural monopolies to-day in the industrial world. The Oil Trust and the Steel Trust have been referred to as natural monopolies, but they are both most unnatural monopolies. The Oil Trust acquired its control of the market by ruthless and unconscionable conduct which was not only a sin against society, but in large part involved flagrant violations of law. Without the aid of criminal rebating, of bribery and corruption, the Standard Oil would never have acquired the vast wealth and power which enabled it to destroy its small competitors by price-cutting, and similar practices.

"The Steel Trust, while apparently free from the grosser forms of suppressing competition, acquired control of the market not through greater efficiency, but by buying up existing plants and particularly ore supplies at fabulous prices. Can the monopoly of the Steel Trust be properly called 'natural' when it results in large part from a purchase of a single huge concern at many times its intrinsic value and from the purchase of ore reserves at from six to twelve times their value?

No Monopoly of Natural Growth.

"It is believed that not a single industrial monopoly exists to-day which is the result of natural growth.

"That mere size does not bring success is illustrated by the records of our industrial trusts during the past ten years. This record, if examined, will show that:

"(1) Most of the Trusts which did not secure monopolistic positions have either failed altogether or have failed to show marked success as compared with the independent concerns.

"This is true, for instance, of the Newspaper Trust, the Writing Paper Trust, the Upper Leather Trust, the Sole Leather Trust, the Woolen Trust, the Paper Bag Trust, the International Mercantile Marine.

"(2) Most of these Trusts which have shown marked success secured monopolistic positions either by controlling the whole business themselves, or by doing so in combination with others. And their success has been due mainly to their ability to fix prices.

"This is true, for instance, of the Standard Oil Trust, the Shoe Machinery Trust, the Tobacco Trust, the Steel Trust, the Pullman Car Company.

Where Independents Shine.

"(3) Most of the trusts which did not secure for themselves monopoly in the particular branch of trade, but controlled the situation only through price agreements with competitors, have been unable to hold their own share of the market as against the independents.

"This is true, for instance, of the Sugar Trust and the Steel Trust.

"(4) Most of the efficiently managed Trusts have found it necessary to limit the size of their own units for production and for distribution.

"This is true, for instance, of the Tobacco Trust, the Standard Oil Trust, the Steel Trust.

"These general rules are, of course, subject to exceptions due to instances of conspicuous ability on the part of managers or unusual trade conditions.

"Our people demand of any institution two kinds of efficiency—Economic Efficiency and Social Efficiency. Our monopolistic trusts have failed in both respects, as is illustrated by the record of our greatest trust—the Steel Trust, frequently called 'a good trust.'

Steel Trust Scared.

"Economically it has failed to keep pace with the demands of the times in the quality of the product, as the increasing number of accidents due to defective rails discloses. It has failed to hold America's proportion of the foreign steel markets, as the great growth of Germany's and England's export trade proves. It has failed to hold its own proportion of the domestic markets, in spite of its additional purchases of competing plants. It has failed to maintain its own percentage of earlier years of profits on capital invested.

"Socially its record has been even worse. [illegible] accumulated for or disbursed to stockholders in ten years over $650,000,000 in excess of a fair return upon capital, and has enriched promoters. It has subjected the laborer to grossly excessive toil and deprived him of industrial liberty. W[illegible] in England employes in the steel trade work on the average only 55.2 hours per week, one-half of our steel workers work seventy-two or more a week; about a third work more than seventy-two hours, and a fourth twelve hours a day for seven days a week.

"Having driven out unionism, it has taught the American worker what an 'Iron Master' really is. To work men twelve hours a day seven days a week—with an occasional twenty-four-hour work day when the shift is made—makes not only 'old men at forty,' but necessarily degenerates the race, physically, intellectually and morally. The Steel Trust has indeed been "The Prince and the Pauperizer."

Big Party at Shipyard.

Fifty members of the Field and Forest Club of Dorchester visited the ship yards of Lawley & Sons in Neponset yesterday. The party was in charge of Miss Hattie Holmes and E. Minot Talbot.

MME. HOMER, PROUD MOTHER, WHO WILL AGAIN SING IN OPERA

Mme. Louise Homer, who now sings lullabies to infant, plans to return to triumphs of stage.

MME. LOUISE HOMER TO RETURN TO OPERA

NEW YORK, Jan. 13.—"Isn't she a dear?" said Mme. Louise Homer, as she gently pulled back the coverlet of a crib in which, sound asleep, lay her daughter, Hester Makepeace Homer, born on December 12. "And look at those hands! Aren't they just like Sidney's?" They were such tiny little ping things! But Sidney—that's her husband—laughed. Whereupon Mme. Homer very quietly but firmly said: "If either of you dares to make a noise that wakes my baby up, out of my sitting room both of you go at once."

"But Mme. Homer, I am utterly unused to interviewing babies," said her caller. To which she replied: "Well, you'll be lucky if you escape without my baby interviewing you."

Just then the famous twins, Katharine Hunn Homer and Anne Marie Homer, a lovely pair, came tiptoeing in and they were old friends. Wouldn't they rather have had a baby brother they were asked. They hesitated, but presently Katharine said: "No! Baby brothers are very scarce in Heaven just now and it takes, oh! such a lot of praying to get even a baby sister. Anne and I, night after night, prayed all night, before we got her. It's very hard."

"Run off to bed!" said Mme. Homer. "He's a crusty old bachelor who doesn't know anything about babies, and he wants to talk to me, and not to you." And with charming courtesys they retired.

Then Mr. and Mrs. Homer and her caller sat down before a comforting wood fire for a chat.

"I'm getting along famously," she said, "and shall be ready for work at the Opera House in a week. I sent word to Mr. Gatti that I would report on January 21, but he has reminded me that January 21 is Sunday, and I would better say January 22. Perhaps I should have said January 24, the ominous '23,' eh?

"I doubt whether you critics, or the public, have missed me at all. I am such an old story as the leading contraito at the Metropolitan. For a long time I have been asking for somebody to alternate with me, and my temporary retirement has permitted you to see and hear that great artist, Mme. Matzenauer.

"I saw her four times at the beginning of the season, and I thought her Amneris, her Ortrud and her Waltraute particularly charming and forceful. With each renewal of my contract I have asked for fewer performances, and I have never, believe me, stipulated for the exclusive right to any part.

PORTLAND STIRRED BY POLITICAL PROBE

County Prosecutor Demands All Facts From Leaders of Both Big Parties.

PORTLAND, Me., Jan. 13.—After a week's examination of witnesses, the Grand Jury of the Superior Court has not made any report on its investigation into election methods in Portland for the past six years, and it is still a matter of anxious conjecture both with politicians and the public at large as to whether any evidence has been found which will result in the indictment of present or past office-holders.

Samuel L. Bates, prosecuting attorney for Cumberland County, in summoning witnesses before the Grand Jury, has made no distinction between parties, and most of them, both Democrats and Republicans who have been called on to testify, are men high in the councils of their parties rather than ward bosses.

This Grand Jury investigation seems to be the return of an apparent boomerang thrown out by six prominent Republican business and professional men, when they brought a bill in equity a week ago naming Mayor Oakley C. Curtis, as defendent and also five Democratic Aldermen, and alleging violations of the corrupt practices act in regard to elections. This act passed by the Legislature of 1911 embraces all kinds of election frauds, but stipulates that action brought against any candidate shall be by bill in equity in the Supreme Court.

Motive Is Questioned.

The justice in whose court the bill is brought, may or may not at his discretion issue order for the defendants to appear before him to show cause why they should not stand trial.

On the last day of the thirty in which the law allows them to file a bill of this kind, J. Henry Rines, Fred E. Eastman, Charles F. Morse and James W. Parker, all rich and prominent business men, and Dr. Alfred King and Dr. John W. Bowers, brought complaint before Justice Leslie C. Cornish of the Supreme Court that Mayor Curtis and Aldermen James Maxwell, Henry T. Scully, Thomas F. Bishop, Patrick H. Connolly and Richard Schonland had violated the corrupt practices act in the recent municipal election. Judge Cornish set a hearing at January 30 for the defendants to appear and show cause why they shouldn't stand trial on the charges preferred.

The six complainants alleged that, without any bias to individuals or parties, they had taken this step merely in the interest of pure politics. However, the fact that they are all Republicans and the defendants all Democrats naturally caused other motives to be ascribed by many people.

See Political Move.

It has been common talk on the street, and is believed by some politicians that the "nigger in the woodpile" is the fear that Mayor Curtis, whose popularity carried him to a sweeping re-election last Fall, would be the next candidate against Republican Congressman Asher C. Hinds. All the complainants are strong supporters of Hinds, and Dr. King managed his last local campaign. It is generally conceded that Curtis would be a tremendously formidable candidate, but if he were found guilty of violating the corrupt practices act he would be debarred from holding any public office within the gift of the State or municipality for four years, and this would eliminate him as a Congressional possibility.

The sensation caused by the publishing of this bill in equity had scarcely begun to wane, when Democratic County Attorney Bates came out with the statement that if there had been any election frauds, he, as prosecuting attorney of the county, should be informed, and as the grand jury was then sitting, he immediately began to summon his witnesses. Instead, however, of confining the investigation to the past municipal election, he took advantage of the State statute, which provides that no crime is outlawed for six years, and he began calling on politicians who had been active in previous campaigns.

Imagine a Sunday Dinner Minus Pie!

That's How You'll Feel Next Sunday if You Don't Get Tad's Joke Book.

Did ever you get a letter containing the delightful please-find-check-enclosed phrase, and find no check?

Did'st ever run down to the store for a package of tobacco, after supper, get into a political argument with the Man, and come home without the smokes?

Ever stand chatting with a pretty girl for an hour, and after she had gone find that you stood beneath the mistletoe

Brother, let these things be so many lessons to you; sisters, take warning!

Next Sunday do not hurry away from the newsstand. Take your time. There is something coming to you.

The Sunday AMERICAN has made a little book out of the jokes and drawings of Mr. T. A. Dorgan, otherwise known as "Tad." You know "Tad," who draws the "Silk Hat Harry" pictures.

The Dorgan volume is called "Tad's Joke Book." It is bound in a paper cover of light blue. It consists of fourteen big pages. One copy of the joke book ought to go with every copy of next Sunday's AMERICAN sold in New England and Canada.

Be sure you get your copy of "Tad's Joke Book" with next Sunday's AMERICAN. The news and special and feature sections of the Sunday AMERICAN will be as many and as interesting as ever. Tad's Joke Book, as the vaudeville advertisements would say, is an extra added attraction.

MORE COLLEGE GIRLS ACT AS BOOTBLACKS

Following the example of Wellesley College girls the students at Mt. Holyoke College at South Hadley are shining the shoes of their schoolmates in order to swell the $500,000 fund which they are raising for an alumnae building.

Hearing of the success of the Wellesley students who turned bootblacks to secure money for the student building they hope to erect soon, some of the girls in one of the Mt. Holyoke dormitories decided to try the plan at their own institution.

Ten cents a shine is charged, and while there is no stipulation that members of the freshman class shall not patronize a shoe-cleaning stand presided over by a sophomore, respect for tradition has thus far prevented such an unpardonable thing.

CROESUS FOR DAY CAPTURES NEW HAVEN

Having Blown in $2,500, McDevitt Borrows $300 and Travels to Elm City.

NEW HAVEN, Ct., Jan. 13.—During a half-hour dash along the White Way section of this city, John Jay McDevitt, Wilkesbarre "millionaire for a day," found time to interview S. Z. Poli, a theatrical manager who runs a playhouse in his home town, discuss predatory wealth with a bevy of reporters, deny that he had any ulterior motives in setting out on his unique tour, and announce that he intended to come back in about a year and take a [illegible].

He told Mr. Poli [illegible] enough to fight "Jack Johnson" [illegible]. Poli offered to buy [illegible], refused to let him pay, saying:

"You may have a [illegible] but I have the [illegible]." McDevitt took one sip from a glass of [illegible] and announced that he did not like the stuff. He said he had satisfied his curiosity sufficiently as to the [illegible].

"[illegible] from [illegible] millionaire [illegible] wouldn't follow it for a year if [illegible] made me a king."

McDevitt said he came to see Mr. Poli but his coterie of followers declared that he wanted to see Yale. He didn't go near the campus.

Out For Champ Clark

Before departing [illegible] Champ Clark for the Presidency. His friends [illegible] writing a book and it was surmised here that this may have something to do with his bid for notoriety. He left for Bridgeport at 7 o'clock.

SPENT THE $2,500, BORROWS $100 AND WIRES FOR $200 MORE

NEW YORK, Jan. 13.—"John, how much have ye in the 'Kitty'?" inquired John Jay, who has managed to spend $2,500 in two weeks without drinking a single glass of wine, of his secretary John Lenahan.

"Thirty-five dollars and twenty cents," responded Lenahan.

"Doc," asked McDevitt, "how much you go?"

"I can le you have a hundred."

"All right," said McDevitt, "and now, John, take this telegram to me brother Dan in Wilkesbarre. 'Dear Dan, I owe you $200. Please send the money to the Waldorf immediately and I promise to come home to collect the rest to-morrow.'"

The $200 requested arrived [illegible] within two hours.

On Mr. Poli's Trail.

"Hurrah," cried McDevitt, lighting three thirty-five cent cigars at once. "Now, doctor, you remember that man Poli, who runs the Opera House in Wilkesbarre and a bunch of other theatres? Well, I've paid ten cents a week to this Poli or his [illegible] every week for [illegible]. Doctor, we're going to New Haven [illegible] Poli lives and that [illegible] gave me his answer [illegible]. McDevitt's money [illegible] to the Grand Central and hire me a special train to New Haven or at least a private car."

The faithful Lenahan bounded away on his errand and then McDevitt and the doctor started out on the second day of the "Millionaire [illegible]." After donning his new suit over his nightie, the same being a union suit, and adjusting his green necktie, McDevitt fared forth. He strolled up Broadway [illegible] the sights to his companion, and dropped into a manicure parlor, where he gave the girl who polished his finger nails a tip of twelve dollars.

"That's the kind of charity I believe in," he said. "That girl, though, is probably a millionaire's daughter in disguise. She is probably hiding from her husband, waiting for a divorce."

$20 for an Irish Steak.

McDevitt's check amounted to $16 and he gave the waiter $4.

"I'm no fool [illegible] some of you fellows [illegible] he confided to a reporter [illegible] charity to give [illegible] in place of a [illegible] rather buy an extra cup of coffee for a hundred men on the bread line."

McDevitt was stopped on Broadway by Pat Casey, the vaudeville [illegible] whom he had met before on one of his journeys to the big city. Casey offered him $500 and then $1,000 to go on [illegible] vaudeville house next week. McDevitt only looked amused.

"Pat," he said, "[illegible] to oblige you. But I'm [illegible] I'm the only man who's ever [illegible] New York on a trip of this kind who wasn't a fool. I don't intend to specialize on this [illegible]. I'm going back to Wilkesbarre [illegible] morning and I'm going without a cent. If you were to present me with $500 now I wouldn't take it. I wouldn't know what to do with it. I have enough money to pay my next meal."

McDevitt next dropped into the Colonial Theatre, where he was shown the courtesies of the house by Miss Nell Revell, the young lady who presides over the "compliments and other things."

"Nellie," said McDevitt, after a half hour's acquaintanceship, "you've got a pretty good job here, haven't you? Enough to support a man, eh? Now, how'd you like it in Wilkesbarre?"

"I never dissipated to that extent," replied Miss Revelle, laughing. "Well then," said McDevitt, "you might send me my allowance every week."

A SHORT SESSION? WELL, NOT SO VERY

Not With His Honor the Mayor Introducing Eighty Bills in One Batch

W[illegible] more than eighty [illegible] for consideration of the [illegible] Mayor Fitzgerald [illegible] the [illegible] of the [illegible].

Assistant Corporation Counsel [illegible] prepared the bills for the Mayor. It was but a few minutes before 5 P. M. last night, the last hour for filing, [illegible] last of the petitions was placed in the office of Clerk Kimball of the House [illegible]. James H. [illegible] agent [illegible] on Beacon Hill.

There are a number of radical measures included among the Mayor's petitions. He seeks to have the city collecting and [illegible] departments placed under civil service regulations. This would relieve [illegible] considerable trouble in [illegible] these offices [illegible] also sought by the Mayor.

[illegible] fire hazard bill, which was defeated last year, is presented again. Bills pertaining to elections provide for a school committee of nine, for a City Council of twelve members from as many Boston districts, and for the changing of the date of the city election day to the Tuesday after the first Monday in December.

Bills for street improvements provide for the widening of Avery street, for a new [illegible] fare from Hanover to Boy[illegible] [illegible] parallel to Washington [illegible] streets, for the extension of [illegible] to Washington street, and for a new street between the North and [illegible] with a tunnel underneath [illegible] for these improvements would be borrowed outside of the debt limit.

For Stricter Building Laws.

There are numerous bills providing further authority for the health department, for stricter building laws and regulations, and others pertaining to taxes and revenue derived by the Commonwealth and their distribution.

The complete list of the most important bills filed by the Mayor is as follows:

1. [illegible] Railroad [illegible].

2. To reimburse the city of Boston for expenses incurred on account of pupils in its Normal [illegible].

[illegible]

25—To amend Chapter 75 of Revised Laws relative to offensive trades so as to give Boston [illegible].

26—Relative to the distribution and sale of milk so as to give Boards of Health greater control.

NOW, MAYOR FARRELL, WHERE'S THAT HOSS?

Told Malden's City Treasurer To Borrow One, But You Didn't Say Where.

As soon as they open the Malden City Hall [illegible] for business to-morrow [illegible] it may be late on account of the snow and things—Mr. Alfred L. City Treasurer Hutchinson is going to walk up to Mr. [illegible] Mayor George L. Farrell as bold as [illegible] and, struggling to conceal his emotion, is going to ask:

"What department?"

Everything [illegible] everything [illegible] upon how Mayor [illegible] Farrell answers [illegible] [illegible]

"What department?" Al [illegible] ask [illegible] politely. [illegible]

And supposing Dr. Farrell—that's the Mayor—supposing the Doc [illegible] at [illegible] his role of [illegible] or rule? [illegible]

"WHAT DEPARTMENT?" Al will say. "WHAT Department?" "WHAT DEPARTMENT?"

You can [illegible] your rubbers that by that time Mayor George L. Farrell of Malden, Mass.—the [illegible] citizens of Newburyport and Lowell [illegible] Junction and [illegible] having [illegible] phone in to ask [illegible] [illegible] Mayor Farrell will be mighty glad [illegible] City Treasurer [illegible] department is going [illegible] drive around town [illegible] help.

Entire City Interested.

You couldn't get anybody in Malden interested yesterday in what [illegible] Andrew Carnegie [illegible] murder case, or [illegible] anything else.

Everybody wanted to chin about the [illegible] order of the new Mayor that the new [illegible] treasurer has got to stop throwing the city's money into livery stables, and must go out and borrow a city hoss from one of the city departments.

The AMERICAN reporter, anxious to make some kind of a showing for his municipality in the Sunday paper—and it [illegible] digging up something good for a column in a town where everybody rushes into Boston on the 7.21 every morning and then rushes back again to supper on the 6.00—ran into the hoss scandal first down in James Jaw Keeney's drug store [illegible] [illegible] the Mayor [illegible] [illegible] THE AMERICAN [illegible] [illegible] of Babylon. Just go out and borrow a [illegible] city department [illegible] [illegible] in Keeney's said this ain't got nothin' to [illegible] [illegible] Street and Water [illegible] Hall and Fran[illegible] and George Chase had one horse [illegible] that belongs to the acting superintendent.

Not a Horse to be Had.

[illegible] city treasurer, looked in the [illegible] and found a lot of Weighers of Coal and Public Weighers. Weigher S. McLeod said he didn't have any horse [illegible] and that's being overhauled [illegible] Sun Baldwin. Al found, moved [illegible] even if he has [illegible] [illegible] Works and Leather [illegible] C. T. Hitchcock a smoke, like [illegible] he is, and suggested trying [illegible] ads in the Evening News. [illegible] right there. "And everybody [illegible] to be quoted, and positively refused their pictures to your reporter.

The city treasurer was looking [illegible] get off in [illegible] [illegible] to-morrow's play will be "What department?"

DRIVES A BAD COLD OR THE GRIPPE FROM YOUR SYSTEM IN FEW HOURS.

The most effective and harmless way to cure the Grippe or break a severe cold, either in the head, chest, back, stomach or limbs, is a dose of Pape's Cold Compound every two hours until three consecutive doses are taken.

You will distinctly feel the cold breaking and all grippe symptoms going after the very first dose. It promptly relieves the most miserable headache, dullness, head and nose stuffed up, feverishness, sneezing, sore throat, running of the nose, soreness, stiffness and rheumatic aching.

Take this harmless Compound as directed, with the knowledge that there is no other medicine made anywhere else in the world, which will cure your cold or end Grippe misery as promptly and without any other assistance or bad after-effects as a 25-cent package of Pape's Cold Compound, which any druggist in the world can supply.

After three years' research we have conclusively demonstrated that quinine is not effective in the treatment of colds or grippe.

Mail Orders

At 8.30 A. M. Tomorrow we begin a remarkable sale to meet the great event which was first held at this time in 1905, and which has been held every year since. This is the history of it:

Jan. 1905 We nearly sold out in one day the large stock of Gross & Strauss—a well-known apparel shop that had decided to go out of business.

Jan. 1906 This day was stormy, and we did not quite equal the 1905 sale.

Jan. 1907 This day set a new high-water mark for sales at Filene's—big as our records were.

Jan. 1908 And here we went ahead of 1907—by thousands of dollars.

Jan. 1909 Again ahead—and again by a large amount.

Jan. 1910 Exceeded all previous records by many thousands of dollars.

Jan. 1911 Beat even the 1910 figures—Though it was one of the coldest days of the winter.

The increased success of this sale—year after year—has been because we have offered New Styles and New Merchandise at prices no higher than those asked elsewhere for old styles and old merchandise.

REV. MILLARD F. JOHNSON, of Roxbury:

"So far as I am individually concerned I do not see any reason why there should not be the due process of law in the case of [illegible] convicted of a crime so terrible as Richeson's was. I believe the law is for the protection of good [illegible] and I do not believe that any [illegible] who violates the law properly [illegible] is entitled to immunity. I am in favor of the due process of the law, and I would not interfere with its course."

OLIVER M. WENTWORTH, of the Oliver M. Wentworth Monumental Works:

"I certainly feel that the verdict should stand, by all means. It is the most heinous crime I ever heard of, and I am about seventy-eight years old. I think if the sentence is not carried out, the influence on the community will be very bad."

EDWIN P. WELLS of Newton Centre:

Under ordinary conditions I do not approve of the death sentence, especially where the evidence is largely circumstantial, but in such a case as this where the crime seems to have been so thoroughly premeditated on the part of a man whose training in life should have made him the protector rather than the murderer of a purely innocent girl, I think the ends of justice can be secured by allowing the sentence of the court to stand as given.

Abandoned by Fiancee.

Violet Edmands was one of the last among those directly concerned in the welfare and reputation of Richeson to abandon him. Since his confession was made public, a week ago, she has not sent a letter to him in his cell at the Charles street jail nor communicated with him in any way.

Miss Edmands had been one of his most loyal supporters, [illegible] something would develop to exonerate the man who was to have been her husband, and to convince [illegible] it was a terrible mistake.

Her letters [illegible] hope and assurance [illegible] of genuine comfort to [illegible] man. They gave him courage [illegible] pastime in replying to them [illegible] for them daily with the eagerness [illegible] of a schoolboy [illegible].

Last Letter a Week Ago.

He got the last one last Saturday, January 6, the day after [illegible] the world his gramatic [illegible] that he took the life of Avis Linnell. Then they suddenly [illegible] thought at first that [illegible] advertance or unavoidable [illegible] a day or two might elapse [illegible] days have [illegible] their word.

The postmark of every letter which Miss Edmands sent to Richeson at the jail was that of the New York City Post-office. Her handwriting [illegible] to those of the officials whose duty it was to inspect all the mail [illegible] preacher received and sent [illegible].

Nor have any telegrams or letters or messages [illegible] been received from [illegible] father or [illegible] and sisters. Richeson has gradually come to realize that he has [illegible] and shunned [illegible] miserable.

Shunned by Lawyers

Even his lawyers have not [illegible] him since he wrote his confession with the exception of brief interviews they held with him in the detention room at the Pemberton Square Court House last Tuesday, when he was sentenced to death.

Violet Edmands's change of attitude was slowly and [illegible] decided upon. If she had been given her way she would [illegible] against [illegible] that was [illegible] She had [illegible] her father in his defense [illegible] Moses [illegible] financial backing.

It is [illegible] counsel fees and in [illegible].

It is [illegible] the cash in the [illegible] to commute [illegible].

Mr. Edmands and his family do not care to have any direct dealings with Richeson, but they do want, if possible, [illegible] from the [illegible] of the [illegible].

"Reports that Miss Edmands has deserted Richeson are not true," said Attorney William A. Morse yesterday. "You may state that I have no reason to think that Mr. Edmands isn't just as loyal as ever."

Richeson has held heated debates with [illegible] last Saturday [illegible] confession, he [illegible] nervous state, as he expected under the circumstances. He was [illegible] hours after hearing his [illegible] last Tuesday, but has been calm and [illegible].

Those who come in contact with him at the jail have received the impression that he expects to have his sentence commuted and to spend the balance of his [illegible] in [illegible]. He is now thirty-six years of age [illegible], standing six feet two and weighs about 170 pounds. He has [illegible].

"A Born Actor"

[illegible] him, and acts [illegible] the time." This opinion is shared by the prison officials. He was a lover of the spectacular in his [illegible] and was particular [illegible] is reported [illegible].

The Sunday AMERICAN is authorized [illegible] has [illegible] and or a maniac in his [illegible] temper at [illegible] and his courage has failed him, but he has never been violent.

Even the morning he mutilated himself, he proceeded, as has since been ascertained, in a most calm and deliberate manner. He had cunningly planned the act for days [illegible], pretending, under the pretext that his [illegible] was sore, a supply of medical cotton [illegible].

Was Afraid of Death.

[illegible] in his futile attempts to stop the flow of blood, and overcome by pain and the fear of death, he shouted for assistance. It has come to light that his motive was not to kill himself, but to offer a defense [illegible] breakdown even to his attorneys, but he did not realize that such a thing, even if he had been able to stand the tortures of the act as he did for a time, would be surgically impossible in the way of deceiving the medical experts, with [illegible] so close at hand.

But his motive was deception, according to the belief of the jail authorities.

Since he injured himself he has been under special surveillance. Since the sentence of death was passed upon him the guard has been strengthened in his cell on the second balcony overlooking [illegible] street.

Jail officials and "trusties" share in the vigil. The Richeson death watch is made up of a squad who work in relays of from two to three hours. The guards are [illegible] night in the cell with him [illegible] keep their gaze fastened upon the [illegible] every instant throughout [illegible] of duty.

[illegible] such a strain [illegible] continuous. The fresh guard has to take his place before the other is relieved.

Richeson has been quick to [illegible] the significance of all this. He [illegible] at [illegible] and at [illegible] there sits silent [illegible] in his hands for long spells.

Attorney Morse thinks there isn't any danger of Richeson [illegible] but the jail authorities are not taking any chances. They realize that the possibility just now is not so great as it would be in the event the petition for commutation fails.

Richeson no longer has the daily newspapers. He [illegible] guards buy for him nearly all the morning and evening papers and seemed to relish them. He [illegible] every [illegible] about his case, but this privilege has been denied him since he injured himself.

No Longer Given Newspapers.

The jail officials suggested that the newspaper [illegible] perhaps tended to excite the prisoner and the doctors agreed, so he hasn't had the newspapers for several weeks. He may read the current magazines [illegible] and his [illegible] is always [illegible].

His correspondents [illegible] a few since [illegible] that the [illegible] him came from clergymen and [illegible] gener[illegible] most of those who write are [illegible] are of such a [illegible] few ever reach the prisoner. Some send him religious tracts and Bibles, but there has been a marked de[illegible] in his daily [illegible].

than any other man save [illegible] more even than counsel [illegible]. Pastor Helms admits that he could tell a harrowing narrative [illegible] sealed by a clergyman's pledge.

Richeson's confession was not forced by his counsel, as has generally been supposed. It was given first [illegible] at the close of a gloomy [illegible] murderer's cell at the [illegible] and then the attorneys were [illegible].

Confession Was Voluntary

The confession was voluntary. [illegible] stated by the prisoner's [illegible] It was punctuated by lapses [illegible] It was an emotional [illegible] crime—a penitent [illegible] complete.

The Rev. Mr. Helms [illegible] shortly after his arrest [illegible] has been making [illegible]. He will continue [illegible] the imprisoned [illegible] passed upon by [illegible] cell, and if the decree [illegible] hold, the spiritual adviser [illegible] in the death [illegible] is ready.

Mr. Helms is peculiarly fitted for the [illegible] by experience and [illegible] approved an effective [illegible] looks for him. Mr. Helms [illegible] its pitfalls. His parish [illegible] the South End. He has [illegible] of privation and [illegible] to predict that he [illegible] go such an ord[illegible] that few men are called [illegible].

Story Came Suddenly.

He met his duty like a [illegible] of the gospel. [illegible] impression upon [illegible] in his forties. He has a [illegible] of human nature and is [illegible]. That is why he got along [illegible] with Richeson, [illegible] temper, the man of silence and of dual personality.

Mr. Helms has an honest eye. He has broad shoulders, vigor and a firm hand. He is the type of clergyman that invites confidence.

What wonder then, after the men had got to be close friends, after the words of encouragement spoken in a low voice and [illegible] in the murderer's [illegible], that he should, once the impulse [illegible] someone had taken shape, [illegible] this man, who had brought messages of the spiritual side.

[illegible] startling admission came about. There had been other little confidences, but the major topic was [illegible] its thick black [illegible] grief and the [illegible] the narrator's [illegible] frame was [illegible].

Mr. Helms Was Astonished.

Pastor Helms listened with growing astonishment [illegible]. With word and hand [illegible] endeavored as best he could to soothe the grief-stricken confessor. The guards and the [illegible] that evening [illegible] passed [illegible].

Richeson's [illegible] consulted with [illegible] counsel [illegible] and made it clear that it was not to be accepted as a [illegible] a spiritual advisor [illegible] inviolate as are the [illegible].

The [illegible] acknowledgment that model of brevity; that classic among written confessions—followed a week ago [illegible] now the world knows of Richeson's [illegible] what he [illegible] pastor of Morgan [illegible].

"I [illegible] to be in a position to [illegible]," said Mr. Helms [illegible] Morgan Memorial last ev[illegible] the question [illegible] newspaper [illegible] entering the ministry and I fully appreciate the news value.

"Yes, it would make absorbing reading, [illegible] weighty things in my mind [illegible] they are too sacred to discuss.

"I could not possibly say anything without violating solemn pledges and responsibilities. Therefore I must be excused from discussing the Richeson case in any way."

First Confession by Richeson Was Made to a Clergyman

The solemnity with which Mr. Helms spoke the words "Richeson case" told volumes, as did the expression on his kindly face. It would be interesting to get his opinion as to the form of penalty, but Mr. Helms's story will have to [illegible] a sacred chapter in this remarkable case.

"God has not forsaken me. You declared yourself to be against capital punishment while you were in the Governor's Council and now you are the sheriff of Suffolk County," said Richeson to Sheriff John Quinn, Jr., when the latter informed him yesterday that he would have all the comforts allowed by law to a man condemned to be electrocuted.

Take Away Eye Glasses.

His eye-glasses were taken away from him yesterday, to prevent him from using the lenses to kill himself. When the sheriff informed the prisoner that the glasses must be given to the guard, he became indignant, but after some deliberation decided to conform with the request of the new sheriff. He will be allowed to use his glasses to read, but as soon as he finishes they must be given to the guard.

Sheriff Quinn said:

"[illegible] coming to Richeson now will be [illegible] him. The greater [illegible]. Many people have asked me for permission to see Mr. Richeson, but as long as I am sheriff the Suffolk County Jail will not be used as a menagerie for the exhibition of unfortunate human beings. No requests to see Richeson will be granted to any persons with the exception of his spiritual adviser, [illegible] counsel and the District Attorney. No letter of a vile nature will be delivered to the condemned man or to any other prisoner who may be confined in the jail."

If Richeson had had his way, Avis Linnell would have been dead forty-eight hours before she swallowed poison on the evening of Saturday, October 14.

As the facts gathered by the government after weeks of the most earnest research in preparation for the interrupted trial gradually filter to public view, many new and interesting phases are given [illegible] case.

"Can't See You This Evening."

For example, it has just been learned that Richeson telephoned to Avis Linnell at the Warrenton street headquarters of the Young Women's Christian Association on the evening of Thursday, October 12, [illegible] him that night [illegible] had consented she would [illegible] fatal capsule then [illegible] of the following Saturday after[illegible] and strolled with [illegible] of the insti[illegible] evening [illegible] until Saturday [illegible] the po[illegible] Richeson's telephone con[illegible] from the servant [illegible] whose telephone he used. The housemaid recalled that he said:

"But it is such a long time until Saturday."

FOSS'S SECRETARY ON THE RICHESON CASE

Governor Foss has the power to refuse commutation of the death sentence of Clarence V. T. Richeson. But he has not the power to grant a commutation of the sentence without the sanction of the Executive Council.

This definition of the Governor's powers [illegible] this remarkable murder case was prepared for him by the Justices of the Supreme Judicial Court. The court decision [illegible] yesterday by Mr. Holman [illegible].

[illegible]

Mr. Holman's Statement.

Foss Opposed to Death Penalty

The Governor personally does not believe in capital punishment, nevertheless the death sentence is imposed by the courts of this Commonwealth in conformity with law. Such being the [illegible] bounden duty of [illegible].

The words "the power of pardoning offences" are comprehensive. They include not only [illegible] absolute release from the penalty which is referred to [illegible] as a pardon, but those [illegible] exercises of clemency which are [illegible] conditional pardon [illegible].

[illegible] required to [illegible] Council in form [illegible] refuse to [illegible] must take [illegible].

[illegible]

The same principle applies whether the act be a complete or a modified pardon. A commutation of sentence which is the substitution of a lighter for a more severe punishment is an exercise of the pardoning power and must be in accordance with the Constitution. It is an act of the Governor which becomes effective only when concurred in by the Council. [illegible] 14 Mass. 472.

JURY OF PROMINENT CLERGYMEN VOTES "DEATH FOR RICHESON"

Ministers Declare Law Should Take Its Course in the Case of Avis Linnell's Slayer.

THE question of commuting the sentence of the Rev. Clarence V. T. Richeson to life imprisonment, or allowing him to suffer death in the electric chair to which he has been sentenced for the murder by poison of Avis Linnell, has been laid before a jury of twelve Massachusetts clergymen and if a majority rule were in force the condemned clergyman would suffer death.

The jury of twelve clergymen stand nine to three for the death sentence. The three clergymen who vote against it do so because they are opposed to capital punishment and not because there is any saving grace attached to Richeson or his act.

Nearly all of the clergymen declare that Richeson, because of his profession, his education and his position in society, is deserving of all the punishment that the law allows. Not one of the twelve has cited a redeeming feature in connection with Richeson or his atrocious act.

The opinions of the twelve men follow:

REV. DE WITT S. CLARK, pastor of the Tabernacle Church, Salem:

"I think that Richeson should be executed and I am not in favor of commutation of the sentence [illegible]. The needs of society demand that no exception should be made in this case."

REV. GEORGE W. KING, D. D., pastor of the People's Temple:

"Provided capital punishment is to remain there is no reason why the sentence of Richeson should be commuted. The mere fact of being a minister does not weigh in any relation to this case. We should rather expect more of a minister and there is as I say no reason for commutation of the sentence."

REV. LEMUEL H. MURLIN, D. D., president of Boston University and a minister of the Methodist Church:

As Mr. Richeson has proved himself a criminal, I think that no distinction should be made in his case, no matter [illegible] a clergyman and that he should suffer the penalty of the law pronounced upon him.

REV. HERBERT S. JOHNSON, pastor of the Warren Avenue Baptist Church:

"I do not believe in any commutation of the sentence of Richeson. He has committed a dreadful crime. The mere fact of his being a clergyman should not be considered in this matter. Many a man before Richeson has suffered the penalty of death for the crime committed and I see no reason why any distinction should be made in favor of Richeson. In my manner of thinking I hope nothing will interfere with the full sentence being carried out and I feel that the crime and its details justify this decision."

REV. CHARLES F. DOLE of Jamaica Plain, president of the Twentieth Century Club:

"I do not believe in capital punishment, but if this is the law of the State, I believe that it should be carried out on the case of Richeson. This is one of the worst crimes that has came to my knowledge."

REV. SAMUEL G. BABCOCK, archdeacon of the Episcopal Church in Massachusetts:

"The Richeson case brings to light a hideous crime. The person who planned and perpetrated it should be punished to the full extent of the law. I cannot accept this false sentiment concerning capital punishment.

"This crime of Richeson is a great crime against society and I think that the sooner such lives are put out of existence the better it will be for all concerned.

It is not right to expect the State to support such men who have committed such devilish deeds, and what I desire to say is just what I think in my views. I do feel very deeply that capital punishment has been justified in this present case.

REV. JAMES SHEERIN, rector of St. Matthew's Church, South Boston:

This act of Richeson has no redeeming feature. It was cowardly in the extreme. It [illegible] possible [illegible] to [illegible].

But the [illegible] church has done [illegible]. It is not the [illegible] to punish [illegible]. The State in [illegible] in its own interests [illegible] Christian [illegible] shame that it has done [illegible] tory. Its peculiar [illegible] man who is truly [illegible] Richeson is apparently [illegible] and sorry for what he had done.

REV. JOSEPH B. PALMER, pastor of Cavalry Baptist Church, Salem:

I have always [illegible] Richeson a guilty man and feel that he should be punished according to the laws of our State. It is almost time we had the [illegible] of criminals examined to prove [illegible] until [illegible] for people."

REV. EDWARD F. MERRIAM, D. D., editor of "The Watchman," the Baptist Weekly:

I do not believe in capital punishment and society has no right to take the life of an individual. Punishment should not be for revenge, but wholly for the protection of society, and the reform of the criminal. [illegible] idea does not include anything more than confinement for the protection of society. But as the law stands to-day, it should be administered impartially.

REV. FREDERICK W. BUIS, pastor of the First Baptist Church, Salem, a friend of Richeson:

[illegible] of [illegible] this particular [illegible] for his very [illegible] favorable conditions for attainment of the highest moral standard only deepens the awfulness of his crime. It is because my own thinking as to [illegible] take human life. It [illegible].

Eugene Walter Analyzes Richeson Case from Dramatic Standpoint

By EUGENE WALTER.

Written expressly for the Boston Sunday American.

"TRUTH is stranger than fiction."

That is bromidic, I know.

It is hackneyed, overworked, commonplace and is generally used by those who are astonished at some unusual turn in human affairs presenting aspects of human nature, its perversions and subversions, completely beyond the limitations of their commonplace imaginations.

By profession [illegible] I am a dramatist.

It does not matter [illegible] whether I am a good or a bad one, but as there are very few dramatists, and very many critics in [illegible], as everyone who [illegible] pays for [illegible] bring up the [illegible]. Is truth stranger [illegible]

Let me answer [illegible].

I [illegible] a young and comparatively unknown playwright.

Some [illegible] apparently kind friend [illegible] urged me to [illegible] having [illegible] that [illegible] power of dramatic [illegible] expression, and a [illegible] for simple human [illegible] feeling.

These same friends I take into my confidence as I unfold my scheme of a new tragedy. They wag their heads in doubt, but, undismayed, I go from one manager's office to another, trying to get a hearing.

My persistence [illegible] reward.

A Dramatic Hypothesis.

I am given an audience with the foremost [illegible] big managers. He tells me directly and politely that he has not time to read my play, but would like an outline of the story. I give it to him.

Here it is:

"A young and [illegible] important clergyman of prepossessing appearance and appealing manner obtains a charge in an isolated village congregation. He represents a more or less new element of religious training, and includes with his spiritual tutelage, a distinct element of materialism.

"He is [illegible].

"He challenges the sincerity of some of the church elder leaders.

"For this he gains the admiration of many of the younger people.

"His new method as well as other slight embarrassments, lead to his resignation from the church.

"He moves to a larger city, and is given a more important church, with a more important congregation.

"As far as his fiancée knows, he still intends to marry her.

"He brings her to the larger city, places her in a position to improve herself intellectually, and to equip herself to better discharge the responsibilities of a minister's wife.

"In the meantime his relations with her have not been above [illegible].

"His popularity among the younger people of his obscure congregation is taken up by the younger people of the more important congregation, and one of the most prominent and wealthiest of that congregation makes it possible for the minister to marry his daughter.

"With such a marriage, all problems of want, poverty, failure and material discrepancies will be dismissed. But here is a girl, the one of the obscure congregation to whom he is betrothed, standing in his way. He is a minister of the gospel, a graduate of a theological college which provides the ministers for his particular denomination.

"His life is supposed to be dedicated to spiritual [illegible] expansion of moral idealism, and yet this our hero, calmly plans the des[illegible] to the fiancée from [illegible] congregation, that [illegible] the wealth and position of an alliance with the fiancée of the more important congregation.

"The 'hero' of the [illegible] declares [illegible] purchases a [illegible] instructs her as to the use of this drug, assuring [illegible] she will be freed from her physical troubles and that after they will be married.

"Need I go on? [illegible] nestles back in his [illegible]. He has heard [illegible]. He [illegible] a fresh cigar, and says:

"My boy, you are mad. Such a thing never could happen in real life."

But it has happened. It is in the mind of every person in Boston, and of nearly every person who reads the daily papers in the United States. It has happened that [illegible] greatest of dramatists, Destiny, is making every person who has been following this absorbing sordid tragedy wonder at the peculiar and astonished loyalty of the father of the fiancée of the rich congregation.

Most Repellant Tragedy.

The subtlety of this greatest of all dramatists, Destiny, may be clear to the District Attorney of the county, but to the vast majority of the enormous audience who have witnessed this most gripping of repellant tragedies from the time that the murderer was first apprehended, through his attempted suicide—which Webster said is confession—to his real acknowledgment of the crime, the question is, why does the father of the fiancée of the richer congregation, after the confession that the culprit had killed, in a cowardly, vile and inhuman manner, the fiancée of the poorer congregation, still comes forward with the assertion that his material means are at the disposal of the murderer's attorneys to save him from the penalty of the law. Put your fingers on that, ladies and gentlemen of this vast audience, and you have [illegible] fingers on the real drama [illegible] the explanation is [illegible] given, then the true [illegible] tragedy, as far as the [illegible] drama is concerned [illegible].

To the man who has given the slightest attention to criminology, especially [illegible] into the realm of homicide, the brutality of this murder can be best realized when one says that the meanest criminal instinct in the world is that which is bred of hypocrisy.

The Hypocritical Minister.

When a man starts life preaching the virtues of God, and practicing the wiles of the Devil, using this merely as an orthodox phrase, the limitations of that man's criminal accomplishment cease to be guided by conscience.

The man who preaches the doctrines of Christ and practices selfishness, the expoitation of the poor, the physical lust of the abandoned and other forms of moral offense, infinitely surpasses in criminal intention and expectation the man who frankly and openly adopts the profession of the law-breaker and plays his game as a law-breaker, playing it on the square with all other confessed law-breakers. Hypocrisy, such as Richeson has, is in its less disgusting but none the less offensive aspects, the oasis of the great criminal raid that are responsible for our present industrial despotism and gross inequalities. It is the smug pretension of righteousness that makes possible the commission of the most serious crimes against moral law with legal consent and encouragement.

Personally, I do not believe in capital punishment.

To me it is a relic of medieval vengeance.

The taking of a life [illegible] citizen does not justify the taking of life by the State.

When we enter into a higher plane of [illegible] when the psalm singers of hypocrisy, mumbling their prayers [illegible] are supplanted by a nobler race of disciples of God, then there will be some means given us for the regeneration of the fallen, no matter what their defence may be.

Until that time I think men of this type must be separated from social intercourse for the rest of their natural lives, and I agree with the AMERICAN in its editorial, which says that if Governor Foss commutes Clarence V. T. Richeson's sentence to death, then, under his administration, no other man must be legally assassinated.

RICHESON SHOULD DIE IN CHAIR IS WOMEN'S VERDICT

Seven women out of a jury of twelve declare that the Rev. Clarence V. T. Richeson should be put to death for the murder of Avis Linnell. Some of those who favor electrocution in this case are generally not in favor of capital punishment, but the atrocity of his crime causes them to favor [illegible].

The general attitude of the women was [illegible] his sentence being [illegible] that if ever there was a case in which capital punishment was justified, Richeson's is that case.

MRS. JOHN LEONARD of Brookline:

"Richeson should pay the full penalty for his crime. In general, I do not believe in capital punishment, but as long as it is the law I see no reason why this man's punishment should be changed."

MRS. THERESA CROWLEY, lawyer and suffragist:

"If ever [illegible] is justified, I should say this [illegible] is [illegible] abolished [illegible] this State I see no reason for giving Richeson special exemption."

PENIKESE ISLAND SWEPT BY FLAMES

house 150 yards away. Then he [illegible] back and helped Bryant and [illegible] in their ineffectual efforts to save the building. The men were unable even to save any personal property, the sweep of the flames was so fierce.

The distress call sounded on the wireless by Archie Thomas was done at the suggestion of the boy's mother, with Dr. Parker ordering it. Dr. Parker himself ran up a red flag of distress from the flag staff. He approved, when he could, however, the idea of Archie Thomas calling for help. He was grateful, too, for the quick response made by [illegible] [illegible] bank life-savers and the revenue cutter Acushnet. It showed him what help would have been at hand in case the fire had spread.

The wind carried embers away from the big storehouse 150 yards distant, preventing the destruction of that building. But the wind bore embers directly to the sailboat, stored and canvas-covered for the Winter, at the island wharf. The canvas was ignited, but this blaze was extinguished without damage to the craft.

Sympathy From Lepers.

The lepers became greatly excited, especially at first, when they feared that flying sparks might be carried to the colony of buildings on the other side of the hill beyond the wire fence. When they saw that the administration building was doomed they were very sorry for Dr. Parker and the others.

Mrs. Emma Thomas, who is allowed to go to the administration building, came over there after telling Archie to sound a wireless call for help. She tried to console Mrs. Parker, who was in pitiful shape, between her illness and her sorrow over the fire.

After the fire had burned itself out Dr. Parker made arrangements for temporary quarters for [illegible] new hospital, [illegible] yet. There was [illegible] providing adequate heating, but this was finally secured.

There was [illegible] posure have ill effect upon Mrs. Parker, but she seemed to suffer no material harm.

Rough Trip for Cutter.

The revenue cutter Acushnet had a tough trip across Buzzards Bay. [illegible] off the island she was [illegible] than a mile from the shore on account of shoal water. First Lieutenant W. A. Wiley in command, sent Second Lieutenant [illegible] Gray and a detail of men ashore in the cutter's surf boat. The row [illegible] through floating [illegible] suffered from [illegible]

The Cuttyhunk [illegible] gone [illegible] The [illegible] ments but these [illegible] one had been injured [illegible] Dr. Parker found blankets and some spare clothing in the storehouse.

Dr. Parker said:

"The administration building went like a flash. Fortunately the wind was blowing away from the storehouse, else that might have gone too. We will do the best we can. We will keep in the hospital. All the persons [illegible] in the administration building is burned."

Mrs. Parker felt badly, as any housewife would, at the destruction of her pretty home, with all the furnishings and home treasures which she had accumulated. But she made the best of a bad situation and tried to comfort her husband for the loss of his books and papers.

Thirteen in Leper Colony.

There are thirteen lepers on Penikese, eight men, four women and Archie Thomas, the boy. Mrs. Thomas is rated as a nurse, having been appointed to that position when she decided to accompany her stricken son from their home in Upton to Penikese three years ago. The lepers, Mrs. Thomas and the [illegible] in the administration staff compose a total population of eighteen people on Penikese.

The revenue cutter men did what they could for Dr. Parker, then returned to the cutter. The Acushnet arrived back at New Bedford by early evening.

PLAN 1, 2, OR 3? WHICH, FOR REVERE?

Annexation to Boston, Split into Two Towns, or "Let Well Enough Alone"?

What you heard down in Revere yesterday seemed to depend a good deal upon where you went to hear it. For instance:

If you began up along the Beachmont end of town, within the zone of Jack Sheehan's influence—everybody who goes in for boxing knows Jack Sheehan—you found a lot of sentiment in favor of annexation to Boston. You might have heard this in Norcross's drug store.

They talked the same way up at the Center, say in and around the periodical shop, which is Copeland's.

Then you struck down along Crescent Beach way and you didn't hear any more [illegible]

[illegible] the Beach [illegible] George E. Palmer has come up to the legislature, providing for cutting Revere up into two towns. Mr. Palmer would take everything east of the Boston & Maine tracks and set off a new town, to be known as "Crestmont." Everything west of the Boston & Maine would still be called Revere. Mr. Palmer would live in Crestmont. "Crestmont" would keep the Atlantic Ocean [illegible] would allow Revere to come down and wash in it.

Fishing and Politics.

And then you would walk directly across the way, into Eddie Orr's pharmacy, and over there the boys would be talking strongly against annexation, and against separation. "Crestmont" was a joke over there. The Eddieorrers seemed to be [illegible] in favor of "letting well enough [illegible]"

[illegible] at [illegible] ere, so [illegible] just [illegible] has a [illegible] It has 3,500 voters. [illegible] town meeting and it has five [illegible] four representing [illegible] one, the chairman, [illegible]

The town meeting comes along on Monday the 4th of March, and the candidates for the Board of Selectmen line up like [illegible]

[illegible] Selectman Bruno Hartung, who makes cigars in the West End of [illegible] have to fight [illegible] won over Dr. [illegible]

[illegible] Crescent Beach and which has 1,100 voters, Selectman Andrew Casassa, who practices law in the [illegible] up for re-election [illegible] walk away with it gracefully.

Talk of Annexation.

James H. Gallagher, who helps to get out one of the Boston newspapers, will [illegible]. Last year Casassa beat [illegible] by 117 votes, so he [illegible] Gallagher. Mr. [illegible]

[illegible] the center all seats [illegible] were [illegible] as against [illegible] J. Meyer, the [illegible] Joseph [illegible] and [illegible] with President [illegible] said a popular [illegible] of Robinson would fit [illegible] Harding.

[illegible] Acker, a printer [illegible] a paper, is up for re-election [illegible] not [illegible] to speak of.

Wherever one went in Revere one heard a good deal of annexation-to-Boston talk. Truth, however, compels the admission that none of it came from a Revere officeholder. Selectman Casassa, whom one heard spoken of on every hand as a rising young man, was quoted as dead against the marriage.

[illegible] Pierce, who [illegible] the [illegible] laws at the State House. So was Representative McKay, who makes them now, and so was George Palmer, the druggist, father of "Crestmont" and Separation.

The ambition of Selectman Andrew Casassa's young life, one of his friends said in Eddie Orr's, is to establish a Revere Art Museum and have Maffitt Flaherty made Art Commissioner. Maffitt is the handsome big life guard during the bath house season and Art. Selectman Casassa believes, would be fine to take up Maffitt's mind in the Winter.

Otherwise Mr. Flaherty is traveling around the country saying, "Break clean, gents!" and counting "One, two, three, four, five, six, seven, eight, nine, [illegible] out!"

Casassa Right On the Job.

Another thing Selectman Casassa wants to do is to take the entire police department of eighteen men away from Acting Chief Chainey and hire a Regular Chief. Casassa blushes when he thinks of things that have been allowed to go on at Crescent Beach.

His friends think he will stop blushing as soon as Mr. Chainey receives the hook. Talk was also made of how the Beach precinct (Casassa's) is now the home of (1) Superintendent of Streets Walter A. Sherie, (2) Superintendent of Wires John Airla, (3) Inspector of Buildings William H. Graham, and (4) Superintendent George P. Babson of the gypsy moth work. All of which, they said at Orr's, indicates that Mr. Casassa is on the job and doing things for his district.

The war on Casassa up to date has consisted of sly observations that the [illegible] vote of the precinct is solid for him [illegible] learned his law from [illegible] of the Democratic State [illegible] with whom he is still associated. Casassa is a Republican.

Casassa moved down to Revere at the age of two from the North End of Boston, but the only Italian families in his precinct are the Nicolinis, the Gardelias, the Cazales and the Airolas. As for questioning his Republicanism, didn't he spend six weeks on the stump for Frothingham, speaking to the Italians of Fall River, New Bedford, Lawrence, Lowell, Haverhill, Worcester and so on?

Ask Louie Frothingham! Ask Charley Hatfield! Ask anybody! John McDonald run Andy Casassa? Pooh! Yes, and pooh! pooh!

Before the campaign opens the selectmen will do some talking about the site of "Wonderland," now to be cut up into house lots, and they will also discuss a plan, said to have originated with Judge Sam Cutler, for a Town Council, to take the place of the town meeting.

The idea is to have every fifty or 100 voters represented in the Town Council by one Councillor. When the town hears about it there may be some fuss, but the 3,500 voters do not seem to care so very much for their town meeting privileges. It is pointed out, when only forty of them show up at a meeting which disposes of an electric lighting contract for ten years.

From now on until the 4th of March politics in Revere will boil and sizzle. Winter or Summer, somehow or other, Revere works her way free into the newspapers.

MAP SHOWING BOSTON'S COMMERCIAL SUPERIORITY TO CHICAGO

This map shows by commercial measurement that Boston is nearer 52,000,000 people than Chicago and that Chicago is nearer only 39,000,000 people than Boston; also that Boston is 1,225 miles nearer the Panama Canal than San Francisco.

HAROLD BAUER AGAIN DELIGHTS AUDIENCE

Celebrated Brahm Waltzes a Feature of the Pianist's Fine Program.

By FREDERICK JOHNS.

Cold weather had no effect upon the attendance at the Harold Bauer piano concert in Jordan Hall, yesterday. Few pianists have become such favorites in Boston.

The program was a delightful one. It included the celebrated Brahms waltzes, the pretty Kinderscenen of Schumann, and the F Major Sonata of Mozart, as well as a prelude, aria and finale by Cesar Franck and the ill-tempered Chopin scherzo, C Sharp Minor, Opus 39.

There are few more pleasing waltzes than those of Brahms, and Bauer is a splendid interpreter of these gracious and dainty dances. The Mozart Sonata and charm beneath his fingers and the thirteen little child episodes of Schumann were a joy.

Bauer is an intelligent, sane pianist; he may have eccentricities of manner, and he is not exactly as fascinating as his teacher Paderewski, but he is very satisfying to one who likes to hear Chopin, and Franck and the classicists played as the composers would desire.

SECOND DEATH IN WRECK.

Baggagemaster C. R. Manchester Dies at Taunton.

TAUNTON, Jan. 13.—Charles R. Manchester, the baggage master on the passenger train that collided with a freight at East Freetown, yesterday, died to-day at the Morton Hospital, here, as a result of the injuries received in the smash-up. This makes two dead as a result of the wreck. William R. Ashley, a fireman on the passenger train, was almost instantly killed. Joseph Herbert, the engineer of the train, jumped when the crash came and he received cuts and bruises. He will recover. Forty passengers that were on the train were shaken up.

BRINGS SUIT OVER HORSE.

Worcester Man Says It Was Converted Into Soft Soap.

WORCESTER, Jan. 13.—One of the oddest cases in the history of the civil session of the Central District Court was that taken up to-day in which Michael J. Kane sues the [illegible] Company to recover for [illegible] value of a horse which [illegible] claims was valuable, but which, it is alleged, the defendant converted into soft soap and other things.

The defendant denied the horse had any value as an ordinary beast of burden and that it had to be killed.

Harbor Board Chairman Tells How Panama Canal Will Boom Port of Boston.

Boston, not Chicago, is the commercial centre of the United States.

Boston, not San Francisco, is nearest to the Panama Canal and the cities of the west coast of South America.

General Hugh Bancroft, chairman of the port directors of Boston, has been readjusting the prevailing ideas of Bostonians upon geography and trying to show our business men why they should wake up.

San Francisco is going to celebrate the opening of the Panama Canal by a great exposition in 1915, and most people have an impression that San Francisco is the nearest of all the great American cities to the canal.

By actual measurement and as clearly shown upon General Bancroft's chart, Boston is 1,225 miles nearer the canal than San Francisco and 650 miles nearer than Los Angeles. What of it?

"Why, realize it," says General Bancroft. "Quit declaring that Boston is isolated and geographically badly located for development of our commerce and get out and hustle to take advantage of our wonderfully favorable situation.

Proved by Charts.

"There are 91,000,000 people in the United States, and most people think that Chicago is best located to serve this great population. Now for commercial purposes distances are measured by the cost of transportation, and by commercial measurement Boston would be better situated than Chicago if all her water possibilities were utilized.

"By commercial measurement Boston is nearer 52,000,000 people than Chicago, and Chicago is nearer only 39,000,000 people than Boston.

"Let me illustrate. The railroad rate for unperishable freight between Chicago and Seattle is fixed by the cost of sending that freight by water from Chicago to New York and then around Cape Horn in a sailing vessel. The railroads in this instance charge nearly twelve times as much as water transportation costs for an equal distance.

"In my chart which proves Boston is better located than Chicago, I have estimated the cost of water transportation at one-sixth the cost of rail, which is extremely conservative.

"By this reckoning we find that it is cheaper to send goods from Boston to the Middle Atlantic States and most of the South, to nearly all the Southwestern States and to the Pacific slope than it is from Chicago, despite its fine, geographical position.

"In these States more than 52,000,000 people live, while in the States most cheaply reached from Chicago there is a population of 39,000,000.

"To fully realize this better, water transportation is required to Southern and Gulf ports, but when this comes we shall find ourselves better placed to distribute our merchandise through the Pacific States and the South than Chicago.

Calls for Action.

When the Panama Canal is open Boston will have the opportunity to get into close communication with the west coast of South America. New England manufactures should be introduced into Peru, Ecuador and Chili.

"Boston will be nearer these ports than any American city on the Pacific by a thousand miles. She will have an equal opportunity with all ports except the Gulf ports, and as they are not manufacturing centres their advantage is of little importance.

"These are the things I would like our business men to realize, and these are the reasons why Boston steamship lines to South America should be profitable.

"At present we are taking no advantage of our nearness to South America. Boston is nearer than any port in Europe or North America to Rio and Buenos Ayres and yet we permit Europe to get the trade of those countries and do not even provide return cargo for the South American steamers which come here.

"What I would like to have thoroughly understood is that this cowardly wailing about our unfortunate location must stop. It is not true. We have a wonderfully favorable location and its up to us to get out and take advantage of it."

Funeral of David Weld To-day.

The funeral of David Weld of No. 2 Story street, Jamaica Plain, who died suddenly Thursday of heart failure, will be held to-day at his late home at 2:30. The Rev. Charles F. Dole, pastor of the First Congregational (Unitarian) Church will officiate. Mr. Weld was sixty-eight years old and had retired from business.

ALCO TRUCK BEATS OWN WORLD'S MARK

NEW YORK, Jan. 13.—The Alco truck passed its own world's non-stop record of 168 hours at 5 o'clock this morning. It has found its way on schedule time over snow-clogged streets and [illegible] hills, contending also with below zero weather. The total number of hours at 2 o'clock this afternoon was 167 and the truck was still running perfectly in the service the United States Express Company. Horses unfooted were passed at every turn.

The work of the truck has elicited praise from business men in all parts of the country for its wonderful endurance and economy in operation without stopping the motor, night or day. Five two-horse teams have been supplanted by the truck, and four men are now doing what required ten employes by the horses method. The average gasoline consumption is twelve cents an hour, and the average number of stops more than 100 a day. The plan is to run the truck for another week.

"RIGOLETTO" WITH NEW PRIMA DONNA

Miss Scotney Distinguishes Herself in New Role—"Pelleas et Melisande" Again.

"Rigoletto" was sung for the first time this season at the Boston Opera House last night with Evelyn Scotney, the Australian soprano in the role of Gilda.

It was Miss Scotney's first appearance in this part on any stage and only her second in a leading part. Nevertheless she was self-possessed [illegible] music in [illegible] general.

In the afternoon [illegible] "Standing room only" were being repeated by the box office men, and standing room at the Opera House means a narrow place away up close to the roof.

The enormous audience expressed its approval of "Pelleas et Melisande" in no uncertain fashion. The wonderful scenery, the last word in stage art, and costumes, the singing of the strange orchestral music were well calculated to interest all.

POINCARE IS NEW PREMIER.

Bourgoise Accepts Post as France's Foreign Minister.

PARIS, Jan. 13.—Senator Raymond Poincare, former Minister of Public Works and Minister of Finance, to-day accepted the post of Premier of France, succeeding M. Caillaux, and immediately set about the task of forming a cabinet. It was learned that M. Poincare had been recommended by M. Theophile Delcasse, who was proffered the post by President Fallieres [illegible]

That M. Poincare will form a cabinet nearer to the people than has existed in the last regime was a belief that grew out of the circumstances [illegible] the fall of the Caillaux ministry [illegible] charges are made that the [illegible] of the [illegible] cabinet were dictated by French banking interests.

EXCLUSIVE SKATING PARTY.

Second of Season by Country Club of Brookline.

The second skating party of the Country Club, Brookline, was held on the artificial pond last night. It was one of the most exclusive of the season, only seventy five being present. The members and their guests formed at the club house and headed by a band, skated to the pond, which was brilliantly illuminated with vari colored lights. Those who headed the parties were Dr. Augustus Thorndike, W. A. Rollins, H. H. Young, Robert G. Shaw, William S. Knight, E. W. Anthony, Mr. Bryan and William A. Bucklin.

BIG PARTY FOR CHILDREN.

First Corps Cadets Will Entertain About 2,000.

The First Corps Cadets sent out a pleasantly worded notice yesterday that it will give a children's party at the Armory on the afternoon of February 3 from 2:30 to 5:30. There will be a sleight-of-hand entertainment, music and dancing. Last year the First Corps entertained 2,000 children of the families of past and present members. The good time the children had then is to be repeated this year. Lieutenant F. H. Clapp is chairman of the Children's Party Committee.

FOUR STATES WILL VOTE ON SUFFRAGE

Experts Say Women Have Excellent Chance of Winning in Three of Them.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 13.—When the vote is cast for the next presidential election, a ballot will also be taken in four States on the matter of woman's suffrage. Nevada, Oregon, Wisconsin and Kansas will submit the question of the people whether or not the word "Male" shall be stricken from the clause dealing with the subject of the right to vote. Needless to say activities will be intense during the coming months in these campaign States. Experts of many years in the subject say that three of them have excellent chances to win.

Of all good chances, those of Nevada are reported to be the most promising, and for the best and most reassuring of any variety of reasons, the personal. On the word, [illegible] private conversation, of Miss Anna Shaw, president of the National Suffrage Association, the State of Nevada is likely to do almost anything that Mrs. Clarence H. Mackay wishes; such is her wide popularity there in the home country of her husband's family and the State in which her husband was born.

Not so in Wisconsin and Kansas, where they are laying their plans no less thoughtfully than Sherman must have mapped out his march to the sea, and always with the firm conviction that they have a fair fighting chance to win. [illegible] in Wisconsin and the Socialists holding sway there, all that the women feel they have to fear "is an inertia or a lack of an enlightenment toward suffrage among their own sex and a not overly large supply of funds."

If they do, the money is not to be given to them. She leaves $200 to the Peabody Home for Crippled Children, and $100 to the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals.

NEW YORK SHOWS PROVE ATTRACTIVE AND SUCCESSFUL

By J. C. KERRISON.

The two pleasure car motor shows that have already been held in New York city, and the combined pleasure and commercial car exhibit now being held there, produced nothing in the way of novelties and improvements that had not previously been thoroughly discussed and tested. The shows were what might be considered as the "dress parade" of the 1912 models, but just why they should be termed 1912 models is a question, especially in view of the fact that [illegible] of the great majority of the cars have been in the market and seen on the roads for the past three months. This might have detracted from the interest in the shows, but apparently did not, as the attendance in both was equal to the records of previous years, especially so on the dollar nights.

The main advance in the models was evidently as stated in previous issues of the AMERICAN, mainly along the line of refinements—and there were no revolutionary changes in either chassis or bodies, but throughout an apparent effort to give to the purchaser more real value for his money than ever, this desire going to the extent of placing on the market a car that is ready for the road as far as fittings and appointments go without other expenses than the purchase price.

The [illegible] of valves [illegible] unquestionably bound to become a serious one, judging from what was seen at the shows. Nine different manufacturers displayed motors with one style or another of non-poppet valves, six being shown at the Salon and three at the Garden [illegible] being of the Knight sliding sleeve type. The rest [illegible] great majority were poppet valve types. Non-poppet valve types of motors are not so [illegible] for [illegible] Elwood Hayes made a successful tryout of [illegible] of valve. The present is but a skirmish before the battle. It is [illegible] and a battle which will last for years [illegible] ultimately develop a better type of engine than the [illegible] along just what lines [illegible] thing that even the most expert of designers and constructors [illegible] to prophesy.

Next [illegible] importance [illegible] was the matter of self-starters, there being [illegible] really wonderful increase in [illegible]. There were more cars equipped with the device seen at the two shows than at any previous exhibit, [illegible] displayed [illegible] elsewhere. [illegible] feeling is that the self-starter has reached such a stage that it may [illegible] considered not only [illegible] being classed as a necessity.

At the present [illegible] self-starters seem to be most largely used by the [illegible] priced car builders.

The centre drive and the left hand steering column show a marked advance over that of previous years. Several builders who heretofore have kept away from this particular style of construction have now accepted the same, and the question of central control versus right hand control [illegible] grow warmer.

There has been a gradual tendency towards increasing the stroke of the motor while the six-cylinder motor continues to grow rapidly in favor even though it might have been thought a year ago that the six cylinder had reached the height of its prestige.

The casting of the cylinders en bloc in [illegible] the four and six cylinder field has become a pronounced type there being now nearly seventy makers of mono-bloc motors, or at least that number of models produced. Manufacturing owners generally acknowledge that the single casting is satisfactory [illegible] into the extremes of temperature that exist in different parts of [illegible].

In the matter of carburetors, one or two builders have brought out changes. One [illegible] discarded the auxiliary valve and has introduced a mechanical carburetor without springs or any variable factor. [illegible]

[illegible] so much as should have been made.

This year the stock cars have an unprecedented excellent equipment and much improvements in mechanical and body design, but no less appreciation is met by the improvements in mechanical and body designs. Furthermore, everyone is glad of the most distinguished air given to the [illegible]

[illegible] accessories [illegible]

Where we haven't the opportunity of indulging in sunbaths and air baths, where we haven't the chance to go out into the mountains, in the woods and on the river banks, then it will be necessary that we do the next best thing and arrange our own homes for such purposes.

We always complain that we cannot have things as those blessed with better circumstances. This is not true. [illegible] We can be [illegible], we can enjoy everything that any man or woman may if we will only learn the method of application, only learn to manage. We can take [illegible] of our body [illegible] though engaged [illegible] day [illegible] We [illegible] get a [illegible] we may [illegible] processes of regeneration and rejuvenation daily, yet that does not excuse us from abstaining from such opportunities altogether.

If it is too much for you to take a tepid or a cold sponge bath before retiring to bed, and go through various exercises of a scientific nature to get your muscles into correct positions and to [illegible] the vertebrae of the spinal column which might have been partially weakened and displaced because of too much pressure in a certain [illegible] them, you can at least take off your garments one by one, and, then rubbing vigorously with your hands, put on a garment covering that part and proceed to wipe and rub the lower limbs, always remembering that the lower [illegible] upward toward [illegible] and when [illegible] it is to be done so downward.

GET ACQUAINTED WITH YOUR OWN PHYSIQUE.

In the morning [illegible] do the same thing [illegible] for it. It will pay you [illegible] attention given to your [illegible] not only get better acquainted with the constitution of your physique, but you will learn to [illegible] [illegible] to a [illegible] a bath [illegible] room [illegible] One-half time will suffice.

LIE DOWN AND REST ON COUCH OR A TABLE.

Take various positions, bend your body in various ways and after you have rubbed the body, lie down and rest. Either lie down upon the floor on a clean linen sheet or else on a silk blanket of various colors, except green and black, or lie upon a couch or table, whichever you may find most convenient. See to it that the sun strikes the body, especially the lower parts. The head is to be shaded if necessary with a parasol, as the sun is not to shine upon your face [illegible] If need be, cover your body with a piece of silk of very fine texture and of any color except black or green.

Keep your body in a position most comfortable to you. Do not keep in one position too long, but move your lower limbs from time to time toward your body, one at a time or both. You may take a linen towel, roll it up and place it under the small of [illegible] to make breathing easier.

If you feel like resting or are liable to fall asleep after a while and you feel you can afford such a luxury, put more covers on yourself. You want to feel yourself young and allow your mind to wander to childhood days. You want to think of the [illegible] of youth and "Oh, that I were a [illegible]"

NO THOUGHTS OF OLD AGE FOR PERFECT HAPPINESS.

You [illegible] recall to your mind all the scenes of perfect happiness you have witnessed in your life. You want those moments realized once more in your vision at least. Never allow [illegible] age [illegible] to suggest themselves to [illegible] of any unpleasant [illegible]. Think only of what is [illegible] and [illegible]. Recall to your mind the power of thought over the functions of the body, and while you inhale and exhale allow your thought currents to reveal to you the operations of the body.

The author explains the meaning of muscle dances such as are seen in oriental countries and have been to some extent tried in this country. He says they are made part of a religious rite, so as to remind uncontrolled minds that both men and women are to remain respectable. It [illegible] tells how to court nature.

Nature is full of youth and fragrance, ever joyful and gay. The sky above pictures to us a beautiful display of colors, a source of study to the artist; the yonder mountains reflect the grandeur of form, while the waters rushing through the canyon below thunder forth a music so intensely harmonizing [illegible] that it becomes a great sphere of study to the musician, while the calm and breezy air by the seashore with the ever rolling waves splashing against the shores of time open up a vision for the poet to muse upon.

STUDY IN PHYSIOLOGY OF THE NERVOUS SYSTEM.

All of this and more we find concentrated in [illegible] own being. Have you ever listened to the rumbling [illegible] of life— [illegible] [illegible]

But what [illegible] we do to reach this goal? Make love to nature. Only when in it we see the reflection of our true being shall we willingly bow before it and receive its inspiring influence into our bosom, knowing "Thou art mine as I am thine!" To get it means to woo and win.

It means to work for it, if we ever desire to experience the grandest and noblest within the realms of nature. Thus we come to the point where we are to simplify matters that we may be able to take the proper steps for reaching our goal. Just as in times of peace a country will prosper, just so in the presence of light the individual will experience the blessings of the union with the Universal.

SUNBATHS CONSIDERED "BLESSINGS OF THE WISE."

Sunbaths were considered the blessings of the wise and only those indulged in them who recognized their relation to nature and the grandeur of the Immaculate Conception. Not enough of the efficacy of sunbaths can be said and their value can never be overestimated. Their influence upon the body is more than we have ever dreamed of, while their rejuvenating qualities are greater than anything known to science. Whether old or young, sunbaths are alike to both in their regenerating influence. If young it will keep us in the right path, if old it will turn us in the direction of a better and nobler life.

We are not to forget that to individualize we universalize, and by universalizing all things become equal. We should bear in mind that we must always pay attention to our body if it is our desire to work out our salvation, if we hope to enjoy life. Only when youth and ambition is our lot do we look happily before us, and have something before us worthy of our attention.

We should bear in mind that anything that reminds us of the [illegible] of existence we are to forget and to be able to keep it in the remote past to be remembered no more, we must no longer conjure it up before us. Let it suffice us to know that the [illegible] past is being [illegible] pictured and expressed by the world at large.

HAVE OBJECT IN LIFE; SOMETHING NOBLER, HIGHER.

Let us bear in mind that sickness, sin and sorrows are merely the remnants of the past antiquity, stored up as something to be viewed, but to [illegible] fever is merely the condition once entertained by us but no longer cherished. Let us have something better, [illegible] We must have an object in life, some aim. [illegible] into such a state step by step, as we have done before, only that now we grow into our being consciously and with a better understanding of nature and nature's God, while heretofore we have merely been led into our conditions.

But we are not to stop here, we are to learn after many trials and much [illegible] to walk [illegible] and fret over them? No! Then away with the past, away with the things of superstition! Look ahead before you. Have someone to pattern after, someone to be your ideal.

MAZDAZNAN TEMPLE IN LOWELL.

MRS. M.E.R. HILTON

Aim the highest if you wish to succeed in your desire. Make that which appeals to you as the grandest for the time being your idol, as it were, and when outgrown select something still higher, no longer recalling the former while aiming toward greater and nobler things.

BATHE IN THE SAND, WALKING BAREFOOT.

Wherever advisable and convenient, a person should go out into the sand, walking barefoot, bathing the body in clear sand, wading in creeks and streams occasionally, and from time to time at least, and before sunrise, go out [illegible] through the meadows, over lawns, walking briskly or even running. Where there is a [illegible]

UNIVERSAL CUREALL FOR CONSUMPTION, TOO.

If short of breath and afflicted with catarrh and lung affections, which are due to insufficient generative absorption, you may, in connection with your occasional sun baths, go out into a sandy place, bury yourself in the warm sand in a lying position, face down, and with a hole dug out with your own hand right before you to fit your face, about the depth of a foot or more, with an umbrella over your head, breathe as fully and as deeply as you can with ease, exhaling longer than your inhale.

After three to five minutes of exercise, get up quickly and brush your nude body with a soft brush and oil it before putting on your clothes. Every other day use the pit of three cherry stones for ten days and drink alkali water moderately four weeks thereafter. Fast whenever you can and when so doing use three teaspoonfuls of flaxseed in one pint of boiling water and allow it to simmer for ten minutes. Then strain through a sieve and into a cup containing brown rock candy and the piece of one-half of a baked lemon. (Bake the lemon until it feels soft.) Use a cupful of this tea three times a day.

"ASCETICISM NO NECESSITY FOR LIFE OF VIRTUE."

Asceticism is not a necessity toward a life of virtue and purity. Purity and virtue lie in the observance of nature's laws which insure perfect health and happiness, beauty, form and youth and success in the undertakings of the pursuits in life.

Neither man nor woman can be truly virtuous who does not enjoy perfection. Since there are so many complications arising from married life, it is necessary that we pay some attention to the causes of these afflictions and adopt means which shall prove remedial for these evils and lead us into the paths of a perfect life.

We do not teach asceticism. Because we hold it to be the best life under certain conditions, it does not follow that it is obligatory, or that we expect such a life to be strengthened by vows taken, as all vows are conditional and not binding for all time.

We [illegible] although, to exclude one sex from the other and to prohibit them from coming in contact [illegible] vents which have lost sight of the true nature of a life of sacrifice for the [illegible]

[illegible] in these two different sexed forms, it is proper that we not only study each other [illegible] recognizing their perfection in their [illegible] the sexes means degradation to both, especially to man.

QUESTION OF MONASTERIES; BRAINS VS. PHYSIQUE.

You will always find that monks although studious, although learned in many sciences because of their great devotion to them, are by no means superior to ordinary [illegible] too often become narrow in their views [illegible] Our nuns, whether Christians, Buddhist, Mohammedan, Brahmin or otherwise, are not the women they might have been if they had carried their devout intentions into practical every day life.

Only those monasteries will live where man and woman are placed upon an equality, where man and woman alike follow out their views and live [illegible] forces between them becoming so iterated to such a degree that they grow nearer and nearer to each other until even their forms, their appearances are of such resemblance that a stranger would take them to be of one family, so much so that it would require an expert to determine the difference in appearance.

We hold that to bring about an equilibrium, to overcome false modesty, that Moloch we have made to fill us with constant fears, it is necessary that we mingle with each other. In so doing we will get into closer contact with each other and begin to realize that the differences between the two gradually disappear. We grow into the days of our former childhood, where in our innocence, in our state of perfect life, we knew no difference between one another.

REMEDY FOR WORRIES THROUGH UNSEEN AGENCY.

We knew not why, yet we found people more jolly, joyous, happy and [illegible] when both sexes took equal parts in all our pleasures. And we felt that we had gained, although we [illegible] for all the good derived because of the unseen agency which is such an important factor in [illegible] If we would [illegible] as we began in life, if we would keep up our [illegible] of relationship and not force a condition of separation in after life, [illegible] immense troubles, sorrows and [illegible] that befall us would have [illegible] and father, mother, brother, sister, wife and husband, [illegible] and society would be the [illegible]

If we would continue to remain in the society of the two sexes as one family, we would never fall into error, never make any [illegible] always [illegible] himself in the presence of his dear mother, the young woman in the presence of her loving father. Let men consider themselves in the company of ladies, and women in the company of [illegible] and you will find [illegible] idle reproof would ever become manifest.

Wherever you find men and women alike congregated, and speaking upon the affairs of life freely, you will always find the greatest respect for each other. That strangeness which exists between the two and haunts the ignorant in mind which consider themselves different beings, gradually fades away, and they no longer consider themselves as man, as woman, but as one family whose interest it is to enhance the welfare of one and all.

HOW TO OVERCOME SELF-CONSCIOUSNESS.

In continuing to keep up our relationship we not only eradicate that greatest of all enemies, sex difference but also overcome self-consciousness, which is the outcome of the separation of the sexes to a far greater degree than we might at first dream of. In continuing to mingle with each other, we continue to arouse and exchange the love vibrations between each other without any loss on either part, while the benefit to be derived is equal to all alike. Like and dislike becomes a thing of the past because of the gradual equalization of the differences. Differences only occur where there is a greatly unbalanced condition in the magnetic and electric currents, thus forced separation is brought about by the misunderstanding of the application of sex relation. It is well, then, to begin to learn and understand how we can derive the greatest good from and to each other by the mere presence of one another.

You have noticed from observation that in a couple which entertain pure motives of love, where the conditions, the magnetic and electric vibrations blend harmoniously, that the very thought of her lover colors her cheek to a rosy pink, and the very thought of her smile, her voice, will give him courage to labor and to win.

INFLUENCE OF WOMEN'S LOVE OVER HER MATE.

You have noticed that after a day's hard work, although exhausted and tired he begins to revive again when in her presence; he goes home with new life in his veins, and after a night's perfect rest he takes up the duties of life next morning with renewed strength, fervor and vitality.

And although she might have suffered during the day because of something that may have crossed her path that upset her mind, when arm and arm with him gliding down lovers lane, her footsteps become lighter, the load on her heart that troubled her during the day, rolls away. You have found that she gained in health, that she became more bearable, more agreeable from day to day, more loving [illegible] beautiful, while he added to his [illegible] and never seemed to tire even though his labor might have been full of responsibilities and care. Here we find a key to the great secret that has puzzled many a philosopher, here we find the solution of many a question that has remained unsolved by religious teachers, even law-givers. Hanish says that Orientals still maintain temples where such animals as the lion, elephant, ibex, serpents and even monkeys are kept. These animals are kept there [illegible] purpose of study to learn of them in their ways of life. Polygamy is recognized by but few animals. But Hanish [illegible] would not enter into the question of [illegible] monogamy or polygamy would [illegible] proper relationship of mankind. He then gives descriptions of animal courtship, and continues:

WOMAN HIGHER TYPE THAN MAN, SAYS BOOK.

All philosophies agree upon this one great truth—that woman is the highest type of being. In her lower stages of evolution she shows a tendency of yielding, not because of weakness, not [illegible] of inferiority, but because of manifesting negative expression in form life, which is that of sacrifice of her very life, if needs be, to prove her love, her attachment to nature, her sympathy for everything in which she sees her reflection.

Woman is the stronger of the two sexes, even though she gives up her positive condition, which is her basic principle. Although she may no longer determine the use of her positiveness because of sacrifice, she still possesses its principle.

As she continues to unfold into the realms of her higher presentation, she again resumes her true positive position and at once develops enormous powers and to her achievements there is no end. We, therefore, can readily see why in all times, where philosophy became the prevailing thought among [illegible] was found to be the only being suitable to officiate as priestess and high-priestess, which in other words means that to woman alone belongs the station of a public teacher, a public instructor, a ruler, a governor, as she [illegible] standing as to the use of means most desirable in bringing about conditions that would result in happiness and satisfaction to all. It was recognized that in all dealings she would be the least partial and in case of mistakes would be willing to retrace her steps and adjust the wrong by exercising justice.

WOMAN'S BRAIN ACTIVITY GREATER THAN MAN'S.

It is given to woman to develop the greatest achievements, and her brain activity is by far greater than that of [illegible]

Were woman to have as much brain in size as man, men would never be able to hold their own; they would become a thing of the past, if measured by conditions as we know them to exist to-day, and if it were to be meted out to them with the same measure they have treated women it would fare sadly with the man element.

Here again we can see the great wisdom in nature to take care of its production in a most practical way. It takes man by far longer to comprehend questions of a scientific nature than woman. Of course, men are more [illegible] and will seemingly attempt to work out problems, while woman wants to see the practical side of everything that she may use in her creative intelligence.

You will for that reason find fewer men interested in scientific studies and where you do meet them, you will always notice that they are greatly given to theorizing of a very inferior nature for argument's sake, and the [illegible]

Men, ordinarily speaking, are not as bright as women. They may be shrewd, may be cunning, may be quite deceptive and thus take advantage of the good nature of woman in outdoing them occasionally, but they are not deep thinkers, for they lack the wit and the power of discernment.

You will find that man in cases of emergency loses control over himself [illegible] always finds a way out of difficulties. She will help herself in many ways, where man could not and would not. You never hear of women paupers, never of women beggars, never of women tramps, neither in all the past history of the world, nor in our present day. A woman will not shrink from doing any kind of labor to earn a livelihood; anything that will honestly pay her way appeals to her as honorable as long as she is not compelled to consider it a charity.

A man when he knows no longer which way to turn, when he is at his wits' end, will find fault with a great many existing things of which he is the originator and sustainer, and then go and beg, imposing upon other people. He will take charity, and when he feels helpless, he expects to [be] taken care of. Where a man would starve, you will find a woman prosper and even establish her independency. For that reason woman can get along with less and yet retain her independency.

QUESTION OF WOMEN DOING MEN'S WORK.

"Men think it quite an alarming condition for woman to come forward and take hold of positions heretofore held by men. Men think it an injustice, and they are to a great extent so near-sighted that they tell you it is the fault of the woman that they no longer can procure work or get the wages they call for.

They complain about woman working cheaper than men, and think her to be a detriment to men. Perhaps there is some truth in that. Perhaps it is alarming. Perhaps it means for men to get a little lower before they learn their lesson. Remember men have no one to blame but themselves. How dare they blame women for things and conditions they have brought upon themselves in their ignorance? The differences drawn between the two sexes have reached the climax for ages past and nothing else [illegible] Woman is [not] taking man's place, woman is not competing with man—she never did, she never will. She has been ignored in the past; she is looked down upon at present.

[illegible] very people who are [illegible] ing their very best to improve [illegible] cattle, etc. [illegible] Strange that [illegible] that the cattleman's mind [illegible] thought is absorbed in raising [illegible] that they have no ideas left for their family affairs, for they even [illegible] their own bodies and sacrifice [their] health.

SHOULD IMPROVE THE HUMAN SPECIES.

We think we have a [illegible] improve upon the animals, etc., but for that we might interfere with God's design if improving upon our own kind. If we can improve upon cattle, vegetables and flowers, it follows that we might apply some of that knowledge to the improvement of human kind. Nay, it is our duty to do so, and if we cannot do it, then we must abstain from propagation entirely, that misery and misfortune be not our lot.

"The tall, robust man will always run after the little, sickly woman, because he is spiritually and mentally sickly, very small, and debased in his real nature. His appearance is merely to cover up his real designs, which are to take advantage of and to impose upon those he thinks he can control. He fears he might be controlled if meeting one equal to him in appearance. If he had better judgment he would know that it would never do for him to enter into partnership with one unfit to help to propagate the species, and she ought [illegible] will become manifest [illegible] to whom we give [illegible]

SINS OF THE FATHERS VISITED ON CHILDREN.

It was always understood that the sins of the fathers would be visited (through the mothers) unto the children even to the third and fourth generation, when the fourth generation becomes the identical type of the first, thus perpetuating the condition of the past not only into the present, but even into the future. [illegible] that of the [illegible] expression is apt to be of an inferior kind we should have charity not to engage in anything that would [illegible] upon us, but stand up for [illegible] even though we have to miss many a mark in life, for, after all, sacrifice in the direction of good to the whole will reflect upon us in the [illegible] If we heed not the voice of nature all action must re-act upon us sooner or later, and the sufferings [illegible] to bear upon us are not of [illegible]

[illegible] declares that it is [illegible] how this may be done. His philosophy in this regard is entirely different from anything [illegible] a way [illegible] that is an easy step to more prosaic subjects, such as the falling out of the hair, turning gray hair back to its original color and so on.

HOW TO SAVE THE HAIR AND REMOVE DANDRUFF.

To stop falling out of hair and remove the dandruff or dead skin, caused from impaired digestive organs or [illegible] organisms, oil your scalp thoroughly for three to five nights. Then procure the best tar soap on the market and wash your scalp every night with one teaspoonful of borax and hot water thoroughly using the soap freely. Rinse off with [illegible] water, then cooler and cold water. Dry [illegible] it [illegible] oil of eucalyptus. Repeat this for ten nights. Do not use California oil. Hair will stop from falling out, dandruff become a thing of the past, and the dead hair will disappear.

To turn gray hair to its natural color and make it silky, fluffy and more luxurious, take a good handful of onion skins (Danver onions are the best) and boil them for sixty minutes in a quart of water, rain water preferable. Strain and add to preparation one teaspoonful of tincture of eucalyptus, one-half teaspoonful of borax [illegible] of grain alcohol, or two ounces of cognac brandy. Apply it daily or as frequently as desired, with a little brush, thence rub into the scalp with your finger tips. From time to time wash your scalp with salt brine alternated with strong sage tea, to insure good growth.

FOR CLEAR COMPLEXION; HERE'S A RECIPE.

For a clear skin and a good complexion, always bathe face with hot water before retiring to bed, and then bathe thoroughly with colder and real cold water applying linen cloth dipped [illegible] water to the face, wipe off dry and smooth with your own hands gently, applying any kind of vegetable or nut oils on your face, but never combine nut with vegetable oils, as that would produce fine hair [illegible]

A LITTLE SAGE AND SULPHUR MAKES THE GRAY HAIR VANISH.

A Harmless Way to Darken Hair; Simple Remedy for All Hair Troubles.

Who does not know the value of sage and sulphur for keeping the hair dark, soft, glossy and a good condition? As a matter of fact, sulphur is a natural element of the skin, and a deficiency of it in the hair is held by many scalp specialists to be connected with the loss of color and vitality of the hair. Unquestionably, there is no better remedy for hair and scalp troubles, especially premature grayness, than sage and sulphur, if properly prepared. The Wyeth Chemical Company, of New York, put up an ideal remedy of this kind, called Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Hair Remedy, and now prepared druggists to sell it over guarantee that the money will be refunded if it fails to do exactly as represented.

If you have dull, faded or gray hair in this or turning gray, get a bottle of Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Hair Remedy and see what it will do for you. The preparation is offered to the public at fifty cents a bottle, and is recommended and sold by all druggists.

John Drew Returns to Hub in "A Single Man"

"The Never Homes," a Musical Comedy Farce, Another New Show Opening Tomorrow.

Another of those spectacular and entirely frivolous entertainments which have come to be known as "Lew Fields shows" will open a limited engagement at the Shubert Theatre to-morrow night. This one is called "The Never Homes," and it has just completed a run of four months at the Broadway Theatre, New York.

Like "The Midnight Sons," "The Jolly Bachelors" and other of its predecessors, "The Never Homes" is an admixture of [illegible]

[illegible] May Irwin [illegible] without any formality of custom house negotiations. In the second act she sings several new songs of the syncopated variety, in the old manner that made her the leading exponent of this style of American song.

National Theatre.

Every person in the city who is interested in mental telepathy should go to the National Theatre this week to see Lolo, the eighteen year old Indian girl. She is a seeress of wonderful power and ability and [illegible] ever comedy sketch. Barry and Lancaster will also provide a number of laughs in their sketch, which is well known in vaudeville.

Colonial Theatre.

"The Pink Lady" trips daintily on her way at the Colonial Theatre, where for the past five weeks she has proved more [illegible] than any of the "Girls." [illegible] is as fresh, frisky and [illegible] when first we met her, and [illegible] nent personages of her retinue.

Tremont Theatre.

The "Ziegfeld Follies" starts on its second week at the Tremont Theatre to-morrow. [illegible] Ziegfeld, the originator of the [illegible] Bessie McCoy, [illegible], Walter Percival, the Dolly Twins, Annie Boley, Charles A. [illegible], Vera Maxwell, William J. Kelly, [illegible] Chatelaine, Peter Swift and Bert Williams. Fanny Brice has several new and exclusive songs and the dancing of Bessie McCoy is another feature.

Boston Theatre.

"The Trail of the Lonesome Pine" has entered upon its fourth week at the Boston Theatre [illegible] as if the popular [illegible] the magnificent scenic production which Klaw & Erlanger have given the dramatization of a most widely read book, but more so, perhaps, by reason of the truly sympathetic portrayal [illegible] Miss Charlotte Walker gives of Mr. Fox's book girl, June. Miss Walker does not exaggerate or accentuate the primitive traits of the mountain girl unnecessarily, but presents rather a delightful phase of rustic simplicity which is new to the American stage.

Lillian Goldsmith, and all the other pretty girls of the show, to say nothing of Mutt and Jeff will say good-by to Boston with regrets, for they have enjoyed their visit here.

Premier Theatre.

One of the biggest picture play features of the year will be shown at the Premier Theatre to-morrow. It is called "In the Days of the Six Nations," and utilizes 2,000 feet of film. This picture is typically American in theme, and was taken from Cooper's "The Last of the Mohicans." [illegible] which has made a feature of out door picture plays. A new list of Irish songs will be given, including "The Killarney Girl" and "My Irish Rose." Miss Rose Donaldson is one of the new singers.

Gaiety Theatre.

Frank Finney's newest musical farce burlesque comes to the Gaiety Theatre to-morrow and expects to set the town agog by the brilliancy of its entertainment in music and song of the popular variety, [illegible] girls and the baseball playing sensation, which is a genuine novelty. Frank Finney has one of the greatest comic hits of his career. Minnie Burke, Jeanette Young, the model posing; Frankie Bailey, the character comedienne; Corinne Ford, Pearl Wade, Pat Griffith, Sam Adams, Frank Ross, a student from Heidelberg; George Brennan, the Beau Brummel of burlesque; Jack Clifford, the frolicksome knockabout, and Tom Bulock are all on the list of entertainers.

Another big bill is promised for the coming week at the Shawmut Theatre, the new theatre on Blue Hill avenue. The feature act will be the Great Tallman, the world's wonderful pool expert. Four other acts and latest moving pictures will make up the program. The entire show will be changed on Thursday, the headliner being the Tokio Four, a wonderful troupe of Japs.

The heating apparatus is now complete, making the temperature in the house ideal.

Howard Athenaeum.

There will be a burlesque feast at the Howard this week, with "The Cozy Corner Girls" as the attraction. Dan Crimmins and Rosa Gore head this company of girls, and Lizzette Howe and Gladys St. John are familiar faces to all Bostonians. One of the liveliest joint debates ever staged in Boston will be heard this week at Austin & Stone's Museum, where a half dozen well known and loquacious suffragettes and an equal number of anti-women suffragettes will engage in a discussion of the merits and demerits of the [illegible] question as to whether or not women shall be permitted to vote.

Waldron's Casino.

Those two clever comedians, Morton & Moore, who are appearing as the Clock and the Snowman in "The Merry Whirl," with their own company of players, will be seen at Waldron's Casino this week. "The Merry Whirl" is crowded with mirthful action.

Hub Theatre.

The bill at the Hub Theatre this week will be varied. Adams Mack & Roy, in comedy singing and talking; Harry & Butler, comedy singing and talking; the Charles J. [illegible] Players, in a dramatic sketch entitled "The Devil," will make up the vaudeville features.

CHOSE THE STAGE AS CURE FOR "NERVES"

Vera Finlay Tri[illegible] Else Before Footlights Banished Worries.

Actresses who have [illegible] because of an earnest desire to help the inevitable sick sister or because they were "lured by the tinsel and the glitter of the world of make-believe" are quite frequently met, but it is unlikely that there is any young woman other than Vera Finlay who is now achieving fame [illegible] lights, who deliberately [illegible] stage as a cure for nerves.

Miss Finlay, who [illegible] importance in "The Never Homes," which comes to the Shubert to-morrow, will be remembered as a member of "The Three Twins" company [illegible]

[illegible]

"That's what started me. I had [illegible] [illegible] I am now in perfect health. That doctor of mine was certainly wise in his day and generation."

Heard in The Greenroom

THERE are many men and women on the stage who claim to be exponents of mental telepathy. A great number of these have been exposed as simply show acts and fakes. During the coming week there will appear at the National Theatre a young Indian girl who has astonished the scientists of the entire civilized world. She is Lolo, the eighteen-year-old girl of the Sioux tribe, who possesses wonderful powers of mental telepathy. She is not a fortune teller, nor is she a spiritualist. She acknowledges that she often makes mistakes, but she can read the mind of the average person.

Lolo is chaperoned by J. L. Cotton, former United States Indian agent. She is a very pretty girl and posed for the late Frederic Remington.

MISS SARAH PADDEN, who plays the part of Annie Jeffries in "The Third Degree" at the Grand Opera House this week, began her stage career five years ago with Otis Skinner, immediately upon her graduation from a Chicago convent, where she was the protege of the Rev. Father Dorney, and was the "elocutionary star" of her class.

"There was a mob scene in the first play in which I appeared," said Miss Padden, "and I was one of the green little 'supers.' The stage director was haranguing us, trying to get us to understand when to yell and where to stand, when he suddenly asked, 'Who's got a good loud voice?' I boldly stepped forward and he gave me a line to speak. I don't recall it now, but it had 'damn' in it, and I wouldn't say it. I refused my opportunity to be distinguished and walked home. When I told Father Dorney he laughed, but he never would tell me whether I was right or wrong."

* * *

TWO seasons ago Lew Fields, producer of "The Never Homes," engaged a well known singer and her husband for two important roles in one of his big musical entertainments. This singer, who has a wonderful faculty for "putting songs over," became a star last Summer, but because of the chronic case of "artistic temperament" from which she suffers her managers decided that they could get along nicely without her. This was after several months of troublous trial.

In the Fields production hubby played a sort of second fiddle role, but he aided wifey in making all sorts of trouble. When the production closed for the Summer he approached Mr. Fields, whose opinion of his acting ability might be represented by a large sized cipher.

"Mr. Fields," he said, "my wife and I would like to continue with you next season in this piece, but we think we should get $1,500 instead of the $1,000 which you are paying us now."

"I can't exactly see that," replied Mr. Fields. "I can't figure out where your wife would be worth [illegible] $1,47[illegible] a week to me."

Friend husband left the room quiet and unobtrusive.

AUGUSTUS THOMAS, [illegible] Drew and [illegible] were the three principals of [illegible]

[illegible] new play, said Augustus Thomas. "Mine is full of applications for the second company of 'Passers-By,' we are organizing," said Mr. Chambers. "Gentlemen," broke in Mr. Drew, affectionately patting his, the largest of the three bundles, "it is good to tell you that my bundle is full of that [illegible]

CAROLYN ELBERTS, who plays Miss Dunstan, [illegible] in "The Country Boy," at the Park Theatre, in reality has an excellent soprano voice. Miss Elberts hails from a little country town, and it was while on a visit to her home folks for the rest preparatory to the long season's work that she met with a piece of rare good fortune a short while ago. While at home she always sings in the choir of the church, and on her return visit she took her accustomed seat behind the brass rods. It happened that on a Sunday evening when she was asked to take a solo part, there was a prominent composer of church music in the audience who was so charmed with the clarity and sweetness of her voice that he sought an interview with her after the service, [illegible] Miss Elberts promising [illegible] the first [illegible] position [illegible] in one of the largest churches of the great city of Churches" when she is ready to accept it.

* * *

E[illegible], who has nothing more to do at a performance than sing anywhere from five to twenty songs, dance anywhere from five to twenty dances, and change her costume from five to thirty times may think that her part is as difficult as that of any one of the principals.

May Clinton, of the "Mutt and Jeff" chorus, at the Globe, has to do all these things and at the same time restrain a violent inclination to break into hysterical laughter. As a result, she believes the part she plays is the hardest a chorus girl ever [illegible]

"I come to the stage with the rest of the chorus. I dance and sing and smile with them all. But all the time I'm waiting for and dreading the appearance of Mutt and Jeff. It's awful. The other girls know how I feel about it and they make it worse [illegible] Then Mutt and Jeff appear and I want to laugh, but I can't because I am not paid for that kind of work. I once thought that the comedy would grow stale to me [illegible] hasn't and some day I know I [illegible] lose control of myself—and [illegible]"

Cooper's "Last of the Mohicans," in Picturesque Dress to Be Shown at Premier.

The success with which many of the European film manufacturers have turned great literary works into impressive picture plays has doubtless induced American film makers to adopt a similar course. At any rate, in a new film [illegible] released at the [illegible] said to be faithfully followed. American literature offers splendid opportunities for dramatic pictures, and the manufacturer [illegible]

[illegible] the statement that if the film companies would only put on such historical pictures and with such accuracy, moving pictures would soon become the greatest factor in the education of the coming generation. One settlement worker, braver than the rest, confessed that she was entirely carried away by the scene.

* * *

A new singer has been added to the musical corps of the Premier Theatre. She is Miss Rose Donaldson, who will [illegible] this week for the first time. Miss Donaldson is said to have an exceptionally pretty [illegible] will make her debut in [illegible]

The Indiana Motion Picture Company, composed of South Bend, Ind., men, will be incorporated soon. Its chief object is the exploitation of cities and industries by means of motion pictures. The project had its origin in South Bend a few weeks ago, when nearly 1,500 people visited a picture show to see the city and its industries displayed on canvas for the first time.

The exploitation of South Bend by moving pictures resulted from numerous inquiries received by Mr. Allardt from a number of cities, as well as firms in the advertising field whose products are known from coast to coast.

Thence across to a few ports in Spain and Portugal, beginning the real voyage at Lisbon touching Madeira and thence to Pernambuco, Bahia, Rio de Janeiro, Santos, Montevideo and to Buenos Ayres. Mr. Holmes will give "The Cruise to South America" next Friday evening and again on Saturday afternoon at Tremont Temple.

CAROLYN ELBERTS.

Miss Elberts has taken special courses in physical culture here and abroad and she says the simplest cosmetics are the best.

MISS CLARK IS A REGULAR HOME GIRL

Marguerite Clark of the "Baby Mine" company says that she detests [illegible] and is never so happy as when playing in New York, where she and her sister maintain a cosy flat. "I'm a regular home girl," she said, "and I like home cooking. I like to sew and I like to help about the house and to have something to say about [illegible] I seldom remain up late after the night performance—I usually have my hot milk and get all the sleep I can. I might be called a lucky girl, for I never have done any barn storming and have never been stranded, and, what's more, I have never had to look for an engagement."

Returns to Vaudeville.

With the close of the engagement of "Mutt and Jeff" at the Globe Theatre next Saturday night that house will return to its former policy of high-class vaudeville and moving pictures. The first bill under the new schedule will be presented on January 22. The show will be continuous, starting at 10 in the morning and running until 10.45 at night.

Coming Events.

RAINWATER FOR THE COMPLEXION

[illegible] Beauty Who Knows All About Such Things Gives Some Excellent Advice

Miss Elberts, who is a member of "The Country Boy" Company, has taken special physical culture courses in New York and Switzerland.

By CAROLYN ELBERTS.

[illegible] how the women of the stage retain [illegible] charm and [illegible] an interesting [illegible] than ever before. [illegible] one or more of the new 'ologies' or just the natural order of things, certain it is that the women of to-day are beginning to come into their [illegible] and are realizing that per[illegible] of the stock [illegible] of the actress alone, but to every [illegible] member of society, and woe to [illegible] who neglects her personal appearance [illegible] she tries to please a general [illegible] for the one man alone.

[illegible] our grandmothers discovered [illegible] cosmetics are the best [illegible] most effective ones are the [illegible] rain water. What could be cheaper? [illegible] nothing on the market more [illegible] harmlessly bleaching to the [illegible] who spends all the pin-money she can lay hands on for means of removing tan.

Rain Water and Lemon.

Rain water and lemon juice, dear girlies, will do the trick to perfection. A rain water shampoo is fine also for getting rid of that bleached out appearance of the hair, quickly restoring it to its original lustre and softness. To brush the hair [illegible] from twenty [illegible] to half an hour before retiring at night is excellent for the hair as well as for the muscular exercise. Look into the mirror while you [illegible] from the nape of the neck upward [illegible] surprised [illegible] number of [illegible] play, especially if the [illegible]

[illegible] exercise nothing surpasses [illegible] walk. Coupled with a correct carriage, chest out and abdomen in, with deep inhalations of the fresh pure air the daily morning walk would put [illegible] out of business in a very short while. If one is reducing, she should walk briskly, as if she had to catch a train. If she is building up she should take it leisurely and breathe, breathe, breathe, with great swelling inhalations.

For the Puffy and Fat.

A great exercise for the fat and puffy is the running exercise, raising the feet one after the other with a high running step but without moving from the spot, a kind of treadmill motion. This is more of an indoor exercise, another of which is taken lying flat on the floor or bed with the arms straight down at the sides. Draw the knees up as near to the body as possible and stretch them out slowly with great tension. Then raise and lower each leg alternately with the muscles of the active leg exceedingly tense. This exercise not only helps in gaining the popular sylph like figure which is so necessary if the coming season is to be really a corsetless one, as is reported, but it has a beneficial, sympathetic action on the sagging muscles of the face as well.

All these things are just as beneficial to health as to the personal appearance, but, like everything else we may attempt in life, the measure of success is in direct proportion to the persistency of effort. The only reason that the average actress is so [illegible] from the women of the leisure classes is that the actress must persevere in her efforts to be beautiful since it is a case of "bread and butter" for herself, while her more fortunate social sisters soon tire of anything so strenuous.

A movement is on foot to unite the two organizations.

Next Spring 10,000 white pine saplings will be planted on the East Head preserve.

SUBSIDY FOR OPERA URGED BY THE MAYOR

WOULD BE $8,000 A YEAR

Subsidy Equivalent to Abatement of Taxes; City Later to Own Opera House.

S[illegible] for the Boston Opera House [illegible] a part of a [illegible] Senator [illegible] State Legislature yesterday at the re[illegible] of Mayor Fitzgerald.

The Mayor wants permission for the city of Boston to [illegible] cents of the city tax rate to the Opera House as a subsidy to perpetuate grand opera in Boston.

It is set [illegible] that the Opera House will be come the property of the city of Boston when the subsidy amounts to the total valuation of the property.

As the subsidy will be only $8,000 per year, it would [illegible] to one hundred years before the city [illegible] own the opera house.

The subsidy will equal the amount paid in taxes yearly by the Opera House and is equivalent to the exemption of the institution from taxation.

Mayor Fitzgerald in a statement to the Sunday AMERICAN declares that the idea of a subsidy is his own, that the directors of the Opera House have not suggested it, and he does not know whether it will appeal to them.

The Mayor's Statement.

[illegible]

Director Russell's View.

Henry Russell, managing director of the [illegible] company, said:

I must, of course, study this bill be[illegible] I can say whether [illegible] approve of it. It is [illegible] Mr. Jordan's efforts [illegible] should even be considered in an American state, and to me it [illegible] that civic pride is a potent factor in Boston, more so than in any other place in America. I believe it is the first time that any bill providing that a city should subsidize an opera company has been introduced into an American legislature."

The $8,000 proposed to be given as a subsidy is a comparatively insignificant sum compared with the cost of running the opera house and the opera company. Last season the total expenses were close to $700,000.

[illegible]

In practically every [illegible] subsidies are granted by the government to the opera [illegible] and in [illegible] the opera houses are municipally [illegible] owned.

Paris Opera Deficits Paid.

The Paris Opera has a deficit each year of more than $40,000, which the State takes up, and the Opera Comique [illegible] heavy deficit which is paid by the Nation.

[illegible] joint authority with [illegible] of admission and [illegible] It can be said [illegible] would never consider giving [illegible]

The receipts at [illegible] were a few dollars less than $10,000, and as the yearly subsidy is only eight thousand, the assistance is hardly worth the price.

PRESIDENT OF SMITH COLLEGE SENIORS WHO IS ENGAGED TO MARRY

MARGARET LOCKEY

HEAD OF COLLEGE CLASS TO BE BRIDE

LEOMINSTER, Jan. 13.—At a party of young people held in Worcester the engagement was announced of Miss Margaret Lockey, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John M. Lockey of this town to Bertram H. Hayes of Beachmont, formerly of Fitchburg.

Miss Lockey is one of the most popular students at Smith College, Northampton, being president of the senior class. She is a graduate of the local high school, receiving her diploma in 1907. She is a member of the Phi Kappa Psi Society. She [illegible] a special course in German and [illegible] of the Deutscher Verein Club.

The engagement was kept a secret until [illegible], when it came as a happy surprise to the many friends of the young [illegible].

Mr. Hayes is a clerk in the [illegible]

SHOT 15,000 DEER.

Maine's Hunting Season Shows About the Usual Figures.

BANGOR, Me., Jan. 13.—It is estimated that 15,000 deer were shot in Maine during the hunting season recently closed, [illegible] that number of deer have been [illegible] in Maine every year for the past [illegible] the figures, of course, varying somewhat from season to season.

[illegible] figures for [illegible] are pretty fairly [illegible] this gave the following standing to the several States where deer roam the woods. Maine deer shot numbered approximately 15,000; Vermont, [illegible]; Massachusetts, 1,281; New York, 9,000; New Jersey, 120; Pennsylvania, 800; [illegible] 1,317; Wisconsin, 6,000; Minnesota, [illegible]; West Virginia, 49; Maryland, 6; [illegible] Georgia, 303; Florida, 1,526; Alabama, 133; Mississippi, 500; Louisiana, 5,000.

STRAW HAT PRICES UP.

Braid for Head Covers Was Burned by Chinese Rebels.

Straw hats and what they cost don't cut much ice now, but Summer is coming after a while and the bonnet woven from horse bedding will be more costly than ever before. Blame it on the Chinese rebels. That's what the importers of straw braid say.

Most of the straw braid used in the manufacture of hats comes from the province of [illegible] China. Word reached the New York importers this week that [illegible] of this straw had been seized and burned by the Chinese revolutionists.

CARNEGIE WILL FRAME IT.

Gets Voucher for $28.70 as Witness Fees and Expenses.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 13.—"Pay to Andrew Carnegie $28.70 witness fees and [illegible] expenses [illegible] days [illegible] before [illegible] Investigating [illegible]" [illegible] will never be cashed, instead it will be framed by the multimillionaire.

FOR AGRICULTURAL SCHOOL.

Legislature Will Be Asked to Appropriate $30,000.

TAUNTON, Jan. 13.—An effort is being made to secure an appropriation of $30,000 from the Legislature for the erection of a free agricultural school in Bristol County. It is proposed to submit the matter to the people on referendum at the next State election.

F. H. PRINCE, JR., HERO OF FRENCH ROMANCE

PRETTY GIRL WAS HUNTING

[illegible] Bostonian Showed Skill as Swimmer to Best Possible Advantage.

Romance—the kind that used to [illegible] centuries ago, when the knights [illegible] battle for their ladies fair [illegible]

The story [illegible] F. H. Prince, Jr., son of Mr. and Mrs. Frederick H. Prince of Boston, [illegible] are spending the season at Pau [illegible] of the most expert riders of the hunting set and a dare-devil cross country rider, while riding at breakneck speed the other day was tumbled into the [illegible]. The current at this season of the year is especially rapid and young Mr. Prince had the narrow[est] [illegible] escape from drowning.

On the same day, [illegible] hunting, but a few hours [illegible] Mlle. De Flores, the prettiest of pretty young French women, also took a header into the Gabas. All who had seen the plunge stood dazed for several moments. She was swirled about in the rapids. By this time several cavaliers had dismounted and plunged in after her, among them young Prince, now thoroughly recovered from his ducking earlier in the day. As a swimmer he has no peers. He fought the rushing torrent stroke by stroke, disappeared and reappeared several times before the anxious onlookers. Finally by his master stroke he reached the side of the drowning girl and triumphantly bore her limp and unconscious form to the shore.

The half-drowned Mlle. De Flores was soon restored to consciousness, and young Prince was hailed as the hero of the day.

Frederick Prince, Sr., is master of the Pau foxhounds and the meet was held on the grounds of his villa, St. Helena. In his hunt the horsemen crossed and recrossed the river ten times during the day, and it is quite likely that with so pretty [illegible] bringing the day to [illegible] happy climax that that particular [illegible] will go down in history as the most exciting of the year.

Among the Americans in the party waiting on the shore during the rescue were the young man's father, Mr. Prince, Henry Ridgway, Jr., Thomas P. Thorne and John Wright of Boston.

ZERO WEATHER SENDS SCORES TO HOSPITALS, FROST-BITTEN

Salvation Army Offices Be[sieged] With Appeals for Food, Fuel and Clothes, and Hundreds Are Out of Work

THE coldest day in [illegible] years. That was the report that the weather bureau sent out about yesterday's weather and the only ray of comfort was the word that the temperature would begin to rise [illegible] last night and keep rising until Boston had a chance to stop shivering.

It made work for the plumbers and the dealers in sweaters, overshoes and the like had smiles. It also made work for the internes and the orderlies in the hospitals, for frost bites were very common and accidents on the ice ran a close second.

There was some suffering caused by the frigid temperature, more than from the average cold spell, according to the charitable organizations and those who work among the city's needy and unfortunates.

Many Frost-bite Cases.

More than a dozen people were treated at the Grace Hospital for frost bites. Nearly all of these were for the ears. One man came in suffering from a frozen nose. Among those treated for frozen ears were:

Edwin Harris of No. 23 Newcomb place, Quincy; T. Johnson of No. 1035 Tremont street, [illegible] No. [illegible] Spencer street, Dorchester; John Hayes, No. 332 West Second street, South Boston; John Brennan, No. 1 8[illegible] street, South Boston, and Fred [illegible] of No. 51 Everett street, East Boston.

5 Below Zero in Boston.

When you are reading this to-day, sitting beside the warm parlor radiator or the register in the dining room, it will serve to remind you that there were thousands who [illegible] without fuel of any kind [illegible] and [illegible] to face the biting [illegible] with the [illegible] of clothing. Appeals to Salvation Army.

[illegible] appeals have poured into the [illegible] Army officials in the last three [illegible]

"There is more suffering and we have more calls for help than at any time [illegible] I have been stationed in this city," [said] Colonel Gifford last night.

"Our offices are swamped with appeals for aid, and the worst of it is that they are urgent cases and must not be kept waiting. The relief office forces are working from seven in the morning until midnight, and even then they can not keep up with the demands."

GRADE CROSSINGS AT WALTHAM SOON TO GO

Commission After Two Years of Consideration to Report on Plan.

Four deadly grade crossings in the very heart of Waltham [illegible]

Next week [illegible] commission appointed [illegible] two proposed plans for the elimination of the grade crossings, after two years' consideration, will make its report.

If its report is accepted and undoubtedly it will, actual work to eliminate the crossings will be commenced in the Spring.

The four grade crossings have been the cause of numerous accidents, many of them fatal.

The citizens of the Watch City have been united in urging their elimination. Many of them have appeared before the commission. But [illegible] the crossings [illegible]

Two Plans Discussed.

Whichever plan is adopted by the commission it is [illegible] the findings of the commission [illegible]

[illegible]

The depress[ion] [illegible] depressed [illegible] streets [illegible] The real [illegible] feet [illegible] will [illegible] there [illegible] The elevat[ed] [illegible] shall pass [illegible] structure [illegible] the streets [illegible]

Will Cost $1,000,000.

The [illegible] in the vicinity of one [illegible] 60 per cent [illegible] commonwealth, 30 per cent [illegible] and 10 per cent [illegible]

The advocates of the two plans argue as follows:

Elevation plan—[illegible] There [illegible] enhance the beauty of the city. It will lessen the length of haul.

Depression plan—It will be better for the industries of the city. An elevated structure will be unsightly. It will not prevent sidings, as will an elevated structure.

During the eight years [illegible] the commission has been considering the grade crossing elimination question, its personnel has entirely changed. Its present membership consists of [illegible] G. H. S[illegible] of [illegible] and F. H. Lord [illegible] three members of the [illegible] elected eight years [illegible] Rugg and Judge [illegible]

While the matter of grade crossing elimination has for twenty years or more been the cause of much agitation, only during the past two [illegible] an acute [illegible]

Issue of Election.

It reached its height during the recent city election. P. J. Duane, the present Mayor, and Edward A. Walker, who was then Mayor [illegible] for [illegible]

Duane was [illegible] the depression [illegible] Walker was [illegible] plan at that time [illegible] tration plan.

While it was not openly discussed during the campaign from the platform, it was recognized as the issue on which the contest would turn. It was felt that if the city as a whole favored [illegible] plan Walker would [illegible] be defeated if the contrary [illegible]

It was during the election that the two sides made their decisive stand, and when Mayor Duane was elected, it was considered a blow for the elevation plan. When Mayor Duane was inaugurated two weeks ago Winfield S. Slocum, who had been retained [illegible] the commission [illegible] vacate [illegible] Clarence F. French, who favored the depression plan.

Agitated Twenty Years.

The grade crossing elimination question was first brought forward twenty years ago. For a dozen years the matter drifted along without anything definite being accomplished. In 1904 the elimination question was placed in the hands of a special commission appointed by the Superior Court.

Spendthrift! Act While There's Time.

By HERBERT KAUFMAN

(Copyright, 1911, by Herbert Kaufman.)

Stop doubting. Ambition must have free play—she can't strike with shackled arms.

Opportunity is calling—the world is thinking in Titanic phrases—mighty adventures are under way—great expeditions are setting forth into the unknown. How much longer will you stand aside—where is your fighting blood—where your courage—where your pride?

Tick-tock, tick-tock, tick-tock—your chance is slipping by. Make speed or you'll be left behind.

You're competent and healthy and sane—you have all your limbs and faculties—what more do you want?

Everything that has been wrought on the face of this earth was accomplished with exactly the same outfit that Nature gave you.

Use your gifts—don't give in. You are of the same breed as the men who now control your comings and goings, who dictate what and when, where and how you shall labor.

You want the best things of life without giving the best of yourself in payment—you've haggled over the price of existence.

TAKE A RISK OR TAKE THE COUNT!

A New Year has just begun. Is it to be as empty and as futile as all the rest or will you be a REAL man and make the most out of your hour?

Five hundred years ago society with its injustice and intolerance might have held you underfoot, but today you're king of your own domain—lord and master of your welfare.

Have you no pride—have you no faith?

Look around you—wherever your eye turns some man with no better start than yours—with no greater education and no sounder constitution is shaming you because he didn't quit—because he considered himself equal to his opportunities and, despite every delay and disappointment, kept the fires of Hope flaring.

Have you ever really thought—have you ever really fought—have you ever made one thorough attempt to do better—have you once given yourself a fair, full show?

Tick-tock, tick-tock, tick-tock, tick-tock—TIME IS SWEEPING ON!

Quarter-Annual STOCK ADJUSTMENT Sale

We reach tomorrow the first of four periods in the year 1912 when prices will be reduced for wholesale clearance

Not merchandise bought for the sole purpose of "bargain" advertising, but regular James A. Houston Company Qualities, the standard of intrinsic value at double many of these sale prices

Desirable Winter Merchandise at an Average of Half Price

Every department mentioned below has two and three times the number of clearance items mentioned. Every department not mentioned in this paper is equally ready. See the Sale Placards everywhere.

The accompanying dial is quartered and dated to represent the four seasons of our store year. Each Season or quarter-year is brought to a close by the Quarter-Annual adjustment of stocks—the periods shown by the shaded sections. The calendar hand merges tomorrow into the shaded section at the end of the Winter season. Consequently every piece of Winter merchandise will be reduced for immediate clearance. THE FIRST LOW MARK DOWNS WILL BE FINAL so nothing can be gained by waiting. PRACTICALLY EVERYTHING IN THE STORE IS NEW SINCE THE LAST QUARTER MARK, AND THIS GREAT REDUCED PRICE SALE COMES SO EARLY THAT MOST OF THE SEASON'S STYLES ARE NEW AND CAN BE WORN TWO MONTHS LONGER AND BEYOND.

Broken-Cupid's "Hoodoo?"

How the Marriage of Rich and Fashionable "Gwennie" Burden has Disrupted the Millionaire Bachelor Girls' League of Newport.

THE most exciting matrimonial event of the Winter was Gwendolyn Burden's marriage to David Dows, son of the late David Dows, once president of the New York Stock Exchange. And now society is asking whether the horrid "spell" cast on the Newport bachelor girls has been removed.

Will this one marriage be sufficient to undo the harm done several years ago by the unkind fairies? The marriage of the very prettiest member of the league has attracted attention to the seven who are left.

And these seven are the bride's elder sister, Evelyn; the two daughters of Commodore Gerry, Mabel and Angelica; the two daughters of Senator George Peabody Wetmore, Edith and Maud; May Van Alen, the youngest daughter of James J. Van Alen, and Laura Swan, who is Elisha Dyer's step-daughter.

They formed this league ten years ago, after each girl had broken one engagement or rejected half a dozen lovers, one being equal to the other.

If the remaining seven decide to marry, Newport will be lost indeed. For the Bachelor Girls' League is a most important social organization. No dance, no dinner, no garden party has been complete without a representation from this club.

Each one is noted for something—Miss Burden, senior, for her charming wit and keenness of repartee, Miss Gwennie for beauty, Miss Wetmore for her marvellous knowledge of French literature and an equally marvellous ability to converse in French. Miss Maud Wetmore's tennis ability places her in advance of Eleanor Sears.

The two Gerry sisters are noted for their philanthropical interests and their horsemanship. They both drive four-in-hands, and are members of the Ladies' Coaching Club.

Miss Swan has spent more time in Europe than any of the others, and can speak French, Spanish, Italian and German. She also talks English.

Miss Van Alen spends half her year in England, is noted as her father's protector and for her absolute independence in the formation of friendship. Miss Van Alen cares little to what set a man belongs. He must be interesting—that is all.

While the Burden-Dows marriage is the first, this does not mean that these young women have had no matrimonial chances. Far from it! They have been besieged for years, and all could have married many times had they cared to become bigamists.

Each one of the members of this league is worth several millions. For years at least forty millions has thus been lying loose around Newport and New York. And there is no doubt that desperate measures have been taken by many masculine climbers to attach these millions.

And also several well-known men have paid attention to these bachelor girls. Men who cared little for the millions, but much for the girls. Victor Loew, Lispenard Stewart, Willie K. Vanderbilt, Jr., and John Jacob Astor—are on the list.

To begin with the bride. Probably no girl in the Newport-New York set has ever been so bothered by admiring lovers as the erstwhile Miss Gwennie. Her beauty, her wealth, her charm marked her for conquest at home and abroad. Princes and dukes besieged her. It is open knowledge that the Duke of Roxburghe asked her to be his Duchess before he turned to Miss Goelet.

Why she and why the other members refused to marry is a question that has long puzzled Newport. Why should the beautiful Miss Burden

A School for War Horses

Remarkable Photographs Which Show How the Battle Steeds of Europe Are Trained

Training the War Horses to Walk on Hind Legs and Front Legs.

Difficult Step in Training.—Note the Padded Posts to Prevent the Horse Falling.

IT rarely occurs to us what an [illegible] part the horse plays [illegible] of war. And [illegible] has to be found in his [illegible] of thousands every year [illegible] the veterinary departments of [illegible] world's war offices—quite [illegible], and then trained with patience, kindness, firmness and intelligence. The ideal drill sergeant [illegible] recruits, by the way, is [illegible] born rather than made, [illegible] fortunate indeed is the nation [illegible] possesses many of him.

For [illegible] but well trained, reliable horses even the magnificent cavalry and artillery of France and Germany would collapse disastrously, [illegible] the whole war machine [illegible] a full [illegible]. Thus it is little wonder France spends $1,100,000 a year on her troop horses, Germany $[illegible], 000, and England $[illegible].

The great military nations [illegible] State breeding establishments as well [illegible] ing [illegible] on a war foo[illegible]. Germ[illegible] is supposed [illegible] horses [illegible] France 292,[illegible], Austria [illegible], Great Britain [illegible] and Russia [illegible]. The Czar's vast Asiatic domain [illegible] yield an inexhaustible supply of hardy animals for the imperial army.

No doubt one of these days the horse will have disappeared from the battlefield altogether in favor of the motor. Already powerful cross-country armored cars are taking his place, with their broad wheels assisted by "pedrails" that act automatically like the foot of an animal in crossing obstructions.

And apropos, how curious a thing it is that notwithstanding the vast number of automobiles in this country the price of horses has doubled in the last seven years, while the number of these animals per capita of inhabitants is far greater than when railroads were unknown. The average price of [illegible] in 1900 stood at $44.50, while it is $94.50 to-day.

Efficiently to horse an army is a vast and complicated business. The work of training, classifying and allotting the [illegible] for an expensive staff of veterinary experts. For there is much difference between the horses of heavy, medium and [illegible] between the [illegible] or the horse artillery, field artillery and transport. Those of [illegible] horse artillery differ further still, according as they are [illegible] or detachment or draught purposes. And there should [illegible] a difference between those [illegible] wheel, centre and lead [illegible] same team. [illegible] horses generally vary in size [illegible] 16 hands, [illegible] are [illegible] their shape and action.

[illegible] horses [illegible] with [illegible] look of [illegible] after [illegible] less [illegible] department, how[illegible] Argentines [illegible] shouldered [illegible] headed brute with a character worse than his looks and utterly devoid of courage. Once he had made up his mind to lie down and die not even the lurid eloquence of our troopers could rouse him. His name became a byword of reproach throughout South Africa.

[illegible] inability to evade a better mounted [illegible]. But since that terribly costly [illegible] Great Britain has striven to establish breeding stables and encourage private enterprise, as do her continental neighbors.

[illegible] interesting are those great establishments in which horse and man are trained as a fighting unit under the influence of the general staff. The horse is the cavalry man's "other self," and arrives as a recruit either half or wholly broken. At the depot he is trained and [illegible] drafted according to his size, color and weight-carrying capacity into the various regiments, where he [illegible] make the acquaintance of his other self, and where they train shall for all military purposes be come one—on drill and parade in peace and in war: in victory and defeat.

And as [illegible]

Military [illegible] horse [illegible] ary work, and [illegible] about horse shoeing [illegible] and military telegraph[illegible].

There is quit[illegible] ing instructors, captains, jockeys and trainers [illegible] in the immense [illegible] most picturesque [illegible] officers and men of the [illegible] dan North African regiments of France are in training [illegible] horses.

[illegible] The animal is [illegible] In the British Army four[illegible] legged recruits are drawn up in a circle around a special instructor, who opens the ball by firing a pistol.

Some of the horses take the flash and report very quietly, and are promptly passed on to more severe trials. On the other hand others require lesson after lesson and such patient and gentle treatment before they are quite convinced there is no danger to themselves. [illegible] however, a 15-pounder [illegible] and fired almost over their back and they would [illegible].

After this they are taught to face fire, that is to say, to gallop fearlessly into a line or zareba of infantry [illegible] away with their [illegible] and also to charge batteries of [illegible] artillery. Of course only [illegible] are used, and so to a trained horse going into battle for the first time there is no difference between the harmless thunder of [illegible] and the dreadful death dealing storm that sweeps over a battlefield. The poor animal only learns the difference by bitter experience.

The introduction of smokeless powder has had a curious effect upon these horse recruits. For many of them that would face guns using black powder without flinching will shy and grow terrified at a [illegible], a roar not accompanied [illegible] smoke. The great military staffs of Europe are somewhat divided as [illegible] effect of smokeless [illegible] on men and horses, but the general conclusion seems to be that [illegible] it is not more terrifying [illegible] and horses [illegible].

It is, however, generally conceded that the use of smokeless powder [illegible] more disturbing in effect than the old black powder since the flashes of the guns un obscured by smoke are quite [illegible] fying.

Each army of course has its own peculiar system of training war horses. Both the German and Italian cavalry staffs indulge in "precipice riding" of a fearsome kind. It consists of a short, cross country ride with hurdles and ditches in the course, and then an abrupt and precipice-like descent, extremely trying to the nerves of both man and beast.

There is something decidedly pathetic about these faithful creatures' education. Some of the more intelligent horses are trained for scouting, and develop a sagacity almost human. On the slightest whisper they will lie down and entirely conceal their rider from view, or turn themselves into a living shield for the trooper lying prostrate behind them, and the barrel of whose carbine rests upon their flank.

Fortunately nowadays great attention is given to wounded horses on the battlefield, and veterinary surgeons go in search of fallen animals, for whom, as for the ordinary soldiers, there are ambulances and hospitals replete with electrical appliances, operating tables and every device that modern science can suggest.

This reminds me that in actual warfare the mortality among horses is dreadful. Thus in the Franco German war 55,000 horses were killed; while in Napoleon's campaign beyond the Niemen 65,000 horses out of 80,000 were either killed outright in battle or else succumbed to wounds and sickness. One of the great problems before inventors to-day is to devise some mechanical means for replacing the horse altogether on the field of battle.

Mr. Otis took himself to Paris for consolation and now comes no more to Newport.

Miss Maud Wetmore, [illegible] almost masculine in her ac[illegible], had a charming [illegible] year of her coming out. Is [illegible] will dare predict what next [illegible] will bring forth?

Leap Year---And There Are 2 Men Each for 2,691,278 of Our Women---and 1 Apiece for All the Rest.

TAKE your time, ladies, and watch the step, there is really no necessity for this unseemly haste—even though [illegible] is leap year.

Uncle Sam has finished counting noses and announces in the advance census report that the males outnumber the females by just 2,691,278.

Of course there are some of you who are not satisfied with one husband, but then these greedy ones are offset by those who don't want any, or are satisfied to go halves with some one else. At any rate, the [illegible] extra men ought to be enough to satisfy those who are not content with one husband and still leave enough over for those who [illegible].

There are only six States where [illegible] women need feel any undue elation because it is leap year. These are Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Maryland, District of Columbia, North Carolina and South Carolina. There the women outnumber the men by just about 100,000. There 4,578,173 men and 4,678,955 women.

The majority of the surplus men are found in the far West, [illegible] found, at one apiece, [illegible] East. Just why the men are more numerous is thus explained by the Census Bureau.

"At birth the number of males always exceeds the number of females, but male mortality is always greater than female. Consequently, through the excess of male deaths, the number of females gradually approaches that of males and in the later years of life exceeds it.

"In countries where the death rate is high, an equality is reached at a comparatively early age, and the subsequently [illegible] inequality in favor of the females outweighs the previous inequality in favor of the males, so that in the population as a whole there [illegible] more females than [illegible].

"In the United States there is generally a lower death rate than in Northern European countries, and the difference between the death rates of males and females is not so marked. The equality in the number of the sexes occurs here at a later age than in European countries, and the slightly greater male death rate does not overcome the [illegible] advantage which the males have at birth.

"The result is for the native white population of the United States generally an excess of males."

A big war, of course, would no doubt change these conditions to some extent, but it seems that there are more boy babies than girl babies born during and after a great war, which would tend to preserve the status quo.

For the 3,000,000 men who are doomed to single blessedness there seems to be no hope at all. Leap year only comes "once in four," but every time [illegible] women decreasing, and the ladies can well afford to stand pat, instead of availing themselves of the traditional leap year privilege.

There is no longer any need for women to go West to find husbands, that is, if they are satisfied with one, for throughout the East the sexes are numerically equal. For the man who would be married, on the other hand, the slogan now is: "Go East, young man; go East," where the odds against him [illegible] East not so great as they are out West.

Shuster—The Lone American All Russia Couldn't Scare!

W. Morgan Shuster, Who Was Forced Out of Persia Because He Was Too Honest and Forceful.

How an Up-to-the Minute Young Man Gained the Unique Honor of Being Marched out of His Post as Treasurer-General of Persia by a Russian Army

IN THE LIME-LIGHT.

By ELBERT HUBBARD.

FOR the last few months no one has been [illegible] in the 'spot' than Mr. W. Morgan Shuster, sometime successor of the late [illegible] Persia.

[illegible] was born at Washington, D. C., in 18[illegible], [illegible] first out of his short trousers. His [illegible] in the Senate. Then he bec[illegible] stenographer in the War Depa[illegible] [illegible]

[illegible]

The Persian Government sent an appeal to [illegible] Taft requesting that he should recommend some one to take charge of the Persian exchequer. And Taft named Shuster, being willing to spare him for reasons [illegible] himself.

[illegible] had a wonderful history. Pericles, 450 B. C., wrongfully made use of the treasure of Delos, a fund of about three [illegible] lion dollars that was raised for war purposes [illegible] Persian hordes should come [illegible] direction of Greece.

[illegible] money, built the finest city the world has ever seen. No one complains now on account of the misapplication of funds.

It was over a hundred years after the death of Pericles before the money was badly needed for the specific purpose for which it was raised.

[illegible] reported a million empties going West.

And Alexander, a youth of twenty, was made Captain General of Greece, with orders to [illegible] this Coxey's Army. He did so, and th[illegible] won for himself a name, slightly tarnished, but which is still in the text books.

So in 1911 Persia again is in the public eye, and America supplies a youth to re[illegible] the Persian finances. He does this to the great satisfaction of his employers. Persia is bankrupt. Practically, W. Morgan Shuster was [illegible]. He stood off the creditors, [illegible] Russia and was getting things in good shape when the Russian [illegible]

[illegible] Persia and oppress her own citizens if needs be, and not bother [illegible] a good graduate of an American business college who was on his job.

Russia then demanded that Persia should fire the youth because he was too fresh. This, Persia refused to do, and Russia sent an army of something like ten thousand men or more in the direction of Persia in order to give W. Morgan Shuster the Blue Envelope. No American was ever so honored.

Shuster refused to resign, and called upon the nations to come to his support.

In the meantime, the Russian hordes were marching upon Persia, and finally the best society in Persia, getting goose flesh, prevailed upon Shuster to throw up his job, on payment of a year's salary in advance, and a box of Pittsburgh stogies to show the Pshaw's esteem.

So Shuster is going back home, and is to take charge of an interburban railroad and an electric light plant, and also he will act as president of the First National Bank of Skaneateles.

We are all proud of Bill. He wasn't quite big enough to swing Russia into line, but he threw a scare into the Big Bear just the same. Persia is a little too near the Equator to expect very much from. Shuster says that Persia is the original home of the ancient Coldfeetos, and he will be glad to be back in the land of little pig sausages and buckwheat cakes. Moreover, Colonel Shuster says that Omar Khayyam's Rubaiyat is nine-tenths Fitzgerald, and not Persian at all, Clarence Darrow to the contrary notwithstanding.

Returned a $1,000 Check Because He Hadn't Earned It.

A SINGLE American citizen has been marched out of Persia by a force of 10,000 Russian Cossacks, with [illegible] standing by ready to help if they were not sufficient.

This is probably the greatest honor ever paid an American, when you consider all the circumstances for which it was bestowed.

W. Morgan Shuster, who has been thus honored, has suddenly leaped into notice as a man for Americans to be proud of. His record shows that all his life he's been "a live wire."

[illegible] son of a Washington storekeeper, he attended the Central High School at the Capital and there became captain of the school foot-ball team and president of the class of 1895. He was always a champion of "the little fellows."

He was also colonel of the school cadet corps, and for him Sousa wrote one of his famous marches. He later studied stenography and law at Columbian University.

When he went to Cuba for the Government, he learned Spanish while working and thus was able to translate a new tariff into Spanish.

Here was a plain case of taking advantage of an opportunity. Colonel Bliss, the Collector of Customs, appreciated the help given, and sent Shuster a check for $1,000.

What do you suppose Shuster did? He handed the check back to Colonel Bliss.

"What's the matter with it?" demanded the Colonel.

"Nothing in particular," replied the young man, "except that it hasn't been fairly earned. I've done the translating mostly in office time, and have even neglected my regular work to accomplish it."

It is safe to say that not many youngsters of Shuster's age would have refused to take the money on such grounds. But viewed merely as a matter of business policy, such scrupulousness pays. It paid in Shuster's case. Colonel Bliss let the Administration at Washington know that his assistant was a marvel of reliability as well as efficiency, and lo! when the chance came, he was picked out as the one best deserving to have it.

The chance was the collectorship of customs at Manila—a plum with a salary of $6,000 a year attached to it. It was Mr. Roosevelt, then President, who thought of giving it to Shuster. When he spoke of the matter to Elihu Root (then Secretary of War), the latter said, "Too young." This was in 1901, and Shuster was twenty-four years old.

"He will get over that," replied Mr Roosevelt. So Root sent a cablegram to Taft (at that time Governor-General of the Philippines), saying that the President was thinking of appointing Shuster. Mr. Taft cabled back: "Too young."

The next cablegram th[illegible] Mr. Taft from Washington [illegible] that the Administration, [illegible] of Mr. Shuster's exceptional ability, had decided to waive the question of his age.

Shuster went out to the Philippines in August, 1901, carrying the new tariff for the islands in his pocket. He had already revised it while waiting over for a few weeks in Washington, and he proceeded to apply it after he arrived in the archipelago.

Run the film along for a couple of years more, and we find Mr. Taft the Secretary of War in Washington. A Secretary of Public Instruction for the Philippines is to be appointed, and Taft is recommending Shuster for the job. It is a big position, carrying with it membership of the Philippines Commission (the ruling power of the islands) and a salary of $15,000 per annum.

Mrs. W. Morgan Shuster and Her Two Little Daughters.

During a leave of absence from the Philippines Shuster met Miss Pearl Trigg, of Glasgow, Ky. She was a wonderful blonde. They met on horseback, and soon after she [illegible] to Manila as a bride.

Covered with glory, he returned to Washington in 1909 to practise law. In Ap[illegible] last year the troubled land of Persia [illegible] past the thro[illegible] asked [illegible] American, as a [illegible] country not se[illegible] serve [illegible] President named Mr. [illegible] able for the [illegible]

The Russians knew that the object of Shuster's appointment was to put Persia on her feet, and even before he left Washington they had begun to intrigue against him!

A Persian, who was employed in this country to secure Shuster, has told an astonishing story of how the Russians tried to bully Shuster and even threatened [illegible]

"Soon after Mr. Shuster [illegible] talking with a [illegible] New Yo[illegible] banker, whose name [illegible] tinental bank, called upon him," said this Persian. "I h[illegible] make it public should [illegible]

"This banker seemed to be fully as conversant with Persian financial affairs as the members of the embassy. He told Mr. Shuster that Persia was practically bankrupt, that she could not meet her obligations, and that she could not ke[illegible] make with him. Mr. Shuster had signed a three-year contract as treasurer-general.

"The banker having failed, Russia's spies [illegible] Mrs. Shuster, to [illegible] new post. They sent to [illegible] widely known Washington minister, who told her that in Teheran she would be socially almost an outcast as the wife of the treasurer-general. She would rank with the wives of missionaries, who are not received in polite circles in Persia, Mrs. Shuster was told.

"This was absolutely untrue, but Mrs. Shuster did not wait to investigate it. She told her visitor flatly that she would go where Mr. Shuster went, even if she had no social pleasures. Her husband and her children were her chief pleasure in life, anyhow, she said. And, again, Russia failed.

As a matter of fact, the Shusters were received everywhere in Teheran, and their pretty children—Caroline, six years old, and Little, five—were the delight of their new acquaintances.

He found Persia with a deficit of $[illegible]. Within a year he had $800,000 in the treasury. Russia and England had a[illegible] divide Persia among themselves. [illegible] thing they wanted to see was "the l[illegible] Persian lamb transformed into a strong ram.

Russia seized every opportunity to quarrel with Shuster. The first pretext was the appointment of an English officer in the Finance Department. England, strange to say, supported Russia in her opposition to this appointment. The [illegible]

"Shoot if you dare!" said Shuster to the Russians, but they didn't shoot.

Russia hired spies to watch Mr. Shuster's actions in Teheran, and among them were many desperate characters, who would not have hesitated to assassinate the Treasurer if [illegible] American turned and looked his pursuer steadily in the [illegible] already taken a knife in his hand.

"My Friend in Need Bureau".

How One Woman Solved with an Original Idea the Problem of Self-Support.

By ELIZABETH LEE.

THE Friend in Need Bureau is my own invention. As is proverbial with inventions, necessity was its mother. After several years of newspaper work, the department I conducted was discontinued. I was out of a job, and it was necessary for me to earn my living somewhere else, probably in some other way.

Should I struggle along in the old harassing grind, or was it in me to create for myself some new sphere of usefulness that would guarantee my daily bread and a roof over my head? The more I thought about it the more the latter part of the proposition appealed to me—and suddenly the answer flashed upon me.

Why not make myself the professional friend of the multitude of persons who are continually writing to the newspapers for advice and assistance of every imaginable kind? Instead of the cold impersonality of the editor of the "Questions and Answers Department," I would be a tangible, flesh and blood all-around expert with whom they could deal face-to-face, or in personal, confidential correspondence.

So I furnished a little office, up four flights in a New York office building, engaged a stenographer, put a sign on the door reading, "Shopping, Expert Advice, Housing, Home Helps," indulged in a modest amount of advertising, and behold! The Friend in Need Bureau was a going concern.

I thought I had nothing to learn about the variety and complexity of human needs, but the new demands that are made on me are funnier than ever. If I didn't know the city like a book I should never be able to supply them. For instance, there is a letter from a young woman on a farm of her own in Colorado, who wants to buy a horse and cow, and so is anxious to sell a beautiful buffalo skin. How did I handle that? Why, I went to a furrier and interviewed his raw skin buyer. He gave me the approximate value of a skin in good condition, and told me how to have it packed for shipment. The skin has arrived and I am advertising it for sale.

Two women called on me the other day and wanted to know how they could be sure of getting good value for their money in the fashionable shops. I gave to them my card and several addresses. I have thrown a great deal of trade to the proprietors, and they will not overcharge the people I send to them.

But it isn't all clothes. If it were I might as well be a shopper and done with it. Here's a letter from a woman who doesn't know what to do with her son. He lives in a small town and has lost so many positions there that nobody will employ him. He is getting into bad company, and won't take her advice.

I'm looking up a position in the city for the young man. I think a good stiff dose of homesickness is just about what he needs. In six months he will be ready to go back to his home and appreciate it. It may take a little longer, but the lesson will be learned in the end. It only takes a week or two at a city boarding house to make mother's cooking show up at its real worth, anyhow!

I've been looking up just such a cheap boarding house for an old couple that the wife must support because the husband is an invalid. But it will be heaven to them, because they can still be together. And the landlady, who is a good soul, and does the best she can, will look after the sick husband. You see it's all in the point of view.

You'd be surprised to know how the demands of my customers fit into each other. Just the other day I got a letter from a girl out West wanting to know a safe anti-fat remedy. She said she was sure she'd find a husband if she were only thinner, because she wasn't bad looking and was a good housekeeper.

Did I send her the remedy? No, indeed! I wrote and told her I had sent her name and address to a young farmer not a hundred miles away from her home, who had written to me to find him a plump wife.

"I think a large body nourishes a broad soul," he had written. "I hope you can help me, for I am very bashful, but I have a good farm, and my wife would never want for anything."

Of course I'm not running a matrimonial agency, but if I can help these two young people to be happy I don't know why I shouldn't.

Here's another place where I helped matrimony to run smoothly. A woman came to me and said she was just about to start for Europe, and wanted a smart costume, so that her husband wouldn't find her lacking in comparing her with the other women on the ship.

She was dowdy, but she had a good complexion and figure, and all she needed was some well-fitting clothes. We went to a good shop and I bought her a smart blouse and an ulster of heavy Bannackburn tweed. Then I sent her to a good tailor, and he made her a suit. I went to see her just before she left and showed her how to put on all these things properly. I bought her a hat and a veil also, and she said she would never wear anything again that I had not chosen. And she really was transformed, if I do say it myself.

I have a great many customers who have trouble about their furniture. A woman came to me the other day to know how to mend old furniture, and I sent her a young woman who goes from house to house with her glue pots and brushes, doctoring invalid chairs and tables.

But it hasn't been so easy to satisfy a French woman who has written repeatedly and demanded that I send her a customer at once to buy her antique furniture. A dealer offered her $25 for a mahogany sofa frame, dresser and table. I am advertising it, but she thinks I keep customers in my office.

A great many people want to sell things. Here is a woman who is going into mourning and wants to sell a dress length of silk and some real lace for $25. She sent me a sample of the lace, and it alone is worth $40, so I fancy we shall have no trouble in this case.

Here is a customer who took advantage of the interest I always try to take in people. She telegraphed me in the greatest haste to know how to address her wedding announcements. She added that she would send the fee at once if I would telegraph back. I did so and never heard another word from her, though I sent her a bill regularly.

So when a woman came to me and said that she had lost her purse on the train, and would I please advance her money to get to Rochester, I sent her to the Charity Society. It's their business to find out who's telling the truth and who is not.

The other day a beauty culturist sent to me to know whether I could send her a physical culture expert to give demonstrations in her parlor. I sent her the best one I knew, but she wouldn't have her because she wasn't pretty enough. So I sent her a beautiful Turkish woman, who has been completely satisfactory.

The very same day I had an inquiry from a publisher for a novel dealing with Christian Science, and I sent him the name of an authoress who is a Christian Scientist and writes charmingly.

People often come to me for things that are cheap. One woman wanted a splendid dressmaker who was cheap, and another wanted a small jewelry store where they would do repairing and re-setting cheaply. There are plenty of such in the big Maiden Lane office buildings, and I sent her to one.

Then I had a letter from a woman who said she had $400 to invest. She had had more, but had given [illegible] a clergyman who had gone to the Ori[illegible] family, taking her money with him. [illegible] address of a woman who wanted to dispo[illegible] nished room house, for almost any one can [illegible]

Another girl, more appreciative of m[illegible] the bride, wrote to me and said she had [illegible] letters. She wrote a very neat, precise [illegible] but when it came to getting her own p[illegible] the paper and ink, for the sake of her [illegible] she couldn't do it. I told her to wr[illegible] talk, and now s[illegible] she wrote to me every [illegible] pened during t[illegible] sent it back. A[illegible] the k[illegible] of formality, and her le[illegible]

I am not sure tha[illegible] have is not an old [illegible] comes in and [illegible] used to read my page [illegible] was a woman of sense [illegible] a while, and talks as one fr[illegible] alone at a big hotel, and [illegible] I dislike to take her money [illegible] woman, and my t[illegible] up to her by dr[illegible] neighborhood and have a sp[illegible] and cheer her up as well as I can, and [illegible] I assure you I charge her nothing. For [illegible] tertaining as she is eccentric.

But I really feel that I have helped o[illegible] earn her living in an unusual way. She wr[illegible] Florida that she knew how to make [illegible] and preserves out of sun-ripened fruit. [illegible] some samples, and they were excellent. B[illegible] didn't know how to market them. I went to [illegible] maker and got some beautiful boxes of satin and [illegible] that would be suitable for gifts.

We got hold of some rather unusual jars for [illegible] fruits, and put them on sale in the big grocery stores. The candles I got into some of the big hotels, where she gets much better prices for them than in the Woman's Exchanges. She has more orders now than she can fill.

You see, there are so many people [illegible] to do something or to get something, who don't know where to look. They need a little help, and I try to give it to them. And if I get a little amusement by the way, why there is no harm done.

In the meantime I find myself self-supporting.

Lady Duff-Gordon Describes the Widening Skirts and a Few New Dresses Pretty Actresses Are Wearing

LADY DUFF-GORDON, the famous "Lucile" of London, and foremost creator of fashions in the world, writes each week the fashion article for this newspaper, presenting all that is newest and best in styles for well-dressed women.

YOU will not [illegible] width [illegible] not only [illegible] of walking gowns [illegible] This is as it should be [illegible] certainly been [illegible] Spring I think [illegible] medium [illegible] too tight [illegible] movements [illegible] nor too full [illegible]

[illegible] odd and pretty. It is [illegible] made of any two [illegible] being gray [illegible]

And now let me describe some dresses I have made for some pretty [illegible] actresses.

There is, for example, one dainty dress, for that dainty actress Enid Leslie, in which filmy, mellow-toned net and lawn, Valenciennes lace and hand-embroidery are all brought together to make a semi-transparent veiling for an underslip of flesh-colored charmeuse, where lace, threaded through with palest blue ribbons and caught with clusters of wee ribbon-petalled flowers, figures on the corsage, and again at the skirt hem [illegible] the ivory whiteness of the dress, which thus acquires the faintest and most fascinating [illegible] adorned [illegible] short [illegible] blue taffeta [illegible] ings of its own material, between which show the shimmering points of some narrow silver lace.

As to the hat I have chosen a helmet-shaped and piquant affair of silk which, in its pale rose pink, realizes that first mere suggestion of color, an aigrette shading from white to pink being set at one side and the brim being lined with black velvet, one touch of black [illegible] being almost [illegible] and effective.

A simple dress—but one which I think you would also like—is of charmeuse in real and delicate lilac shading another flower tone—a pale periwinkle blue [illegible] the working of a little [illegible] about the neck, and [illegible] woven with a pattern of silver [illegible] corsage takes [illegible] straight [illegible] across the front being there [illegible] ed, and eventually attached to curves of the [illegible] with a series of little loops and buttons in a slightly deeper shade than the charmeuse background, a similar scheme of fastening [illegible] of the skirt [illegible] the knees [illegible] over flesh pink [illegible]

Another new ratine dress and coat model which seems to be one of the leading favorites of this season in its original coloring of bright emerald green I have made for Miss Leslie in more subdued but very becoming beige. This is an all-in-one dress [illegible] rendered [illegible] The [illegible] for [illegible] to make [illegible] for [illegible] are [illegible] so arranged [illegible] from [illegible] down at the left [illegible] can be more or [illegible] as desired [illegible] some of the [illegible] companion [illegible] coat, which, in [illegible] her if at [illegible] callops of [illegible] the skirt. In its [illegible] new way and [illegible] a double row of [illegible] And then [illegible] is fold [illegible] the blue [illegible] a few diamonds scattered [illegible] stars on the ends, which [illegible] directly [illegible] front [illegible] side, hav[illegible] round a very [illegible] embroidered tunic of the [illegible] chiffon. Blue, too, is the chiffon cloak, whose filmy semi-transparency bears the light burden of [illegible] of silver lace, and is all draped up at either side into silver wrought ornaments.

Do you like the picture? It is, I think I may say without [illegible] rather an "alluring" one, if so [illegible] that the dress has the right wearer [illegible] fair and slight—though, of course, it would be obviously [illegible] suited and unbecoming to any other.

Then [illegible] Miss Hilda Moore—who appears in the same play—is tall and dark and strikingly handsome, she has given me an opportunity to display some of my best-loved Oriental schemes and, in particular, a dress whose closely enwrapped folds are almost suggestive of mummy draperies. But then, after the [illegible] has been most closely outlined, right down to the slender ankle, I have so entwined it [illegible] draperies spread out [illegible] to form when the wearer is in [illegible] pose, a sort of [illegible] for the statuesque figure.

For example, in [illegible] dress I have used [illegible] and under [illegible] the feet with a beautiful [illegible] of orange, while [illegible] outwardly adorned [illegible] bandings of dull gold [illegible] their presence can only [illegible] at occasionally [illegible] are hidden by a [illegible] draped tunic of dark [illegible] marquisette [illegible] and [illegible] of Oriental silk, which blends purple and blue and rose and gold.

Still some other colors [illegible] are in the swathed [illegible] while primarily [illegible] purplish charmeuse is bordered [illegible] different [illegible] narrow line of green [illegible] while then there is one of those long, quill ornaments which I love, its gauzings of blue-green silk giving place quite [illegible] tassle of purple cord and [illegible] while, finally there are [illegible] ing strands of purple and [illegible] bugles, tipped with tiny [illegible] of orange velvet. The corsage is of the kimono variety, its dark blue marquisette veiling flesh pink chiffon, and its cross-over folds [illegible] at either side with a piping of different shaded blue, only the [illegible] being further adorned with some of the gold broidery. This is a gown which satisfies me, both as regards color and contour, and I am thankful to think that nowadays the general public can be depended on to appreciate effects which, not so very long ago, they would have not only failed to understand, but also—and actually—disapproved.

Sleep Badly o'Nights? Here's a Sleep-Making Machine

AN ingenious device to lull the wakeful to sleep has just been perfected by an English scientist. The idea occurred to the inventor while watching an African mother soothe her fractious infant by letting water flow through a reed across the baby's brow, which quickly sent the youngster to sleep.

The sleep-producing apparatus consists of a reservoir containing ordinary water or medicated fluid, which flows through a rubber tube at graduated speed and in fixed [illegible] To use the machine, a [illegible] placed on the forehead and [illegible] the water flows [illegible]

The massage-like action of the passage of water across the forehead has a most soothing effect, [illegible] the most restless soon succumb to it. The explanation seems to lie in the fact that the rhythmic sensation produced by the [illegible] of the water begin eventually to pall on the patient's mind, and the pure monotony of the thing brings the sleep he craves.

Thus the loud ticking of a clock in a library frequently puts readers to sleep although quite involuntarily on their part. The dripping of a leaking faucet, the patter of rain drops on a tin roof or the window pane, or more familiarly, perhaps the monotonous drone of a clergyman's sermon have all been known to have the same effect.

In each of these cases, however the medium through which the effect is produced is the ear and the auditory nerve. In the case of the new sleep-producing device, while the sound of flowing water is partly instrumental, the result is principally obtained through the sensation of touch—the rhythmic action of the water as it passes across the forehead.

The new apparatus has been found to work successfully in [illegible] cases of chronic [illegible] but it is not infallible. Indeed some persons who tried it have found that it tends to keep them awake. In the majority of [illegible] cases and in practically all of the mild ones, however, the results have been [illegible] satisfactory.

It is [illegible] successful in the case of infants. If the machine is generally adopted, the fine art of "walking the floor" at night with a squealing infant may no longer be the [illegible] acquisition it is to the harassed father. Instead, the aroused parent will simply attach the rubber pad to baby's forehead, turn on the water, and "lie down to pleasant dreams." There are great possibilities in the idea.

The machine has been used in the sick room to cool the fevered brows of the patients, ice water being used instead of the ordinary fluid.

The discovery of the X-ray was so simple and obvious that any clever student in a physical laboratory [illegible] Mere [illegible] produced [illegible] photographic [illegible]

It so happened that some keys were lying on the [illegible] drawer. When [illegible] afterward made to [illegible] for photographic purposes [illegible] were found to be "fogged" [illegible] each one of them was a faithful imprint of the bunch of keys.

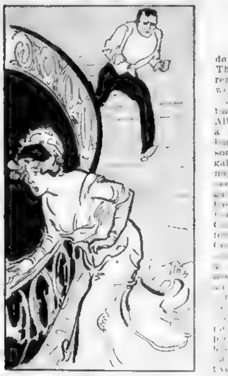
Thus it became apparent that rays of some kind had penetrated through the wooden top of the table and had been so far interrupted by the keys as to make a shadow picture of the latter on the photo plates. It was at once [illegible] had been discovered, and thereupon a series of experiments was undertaken with objects of various kinds placed on the table-top under like conditions.

Everything imaginable was tried. One of Professor Roentgen's assistants picked up a dead frog (which had been used for some other laboratory work), and put it in the place [illegible] occupied by the bunch of keys, a fresh photo plate, as usual, reposing in the drawer beneath. The result was a revelation, for the shadow picture made was not of the frog, but of its skeleton.

From which fact it was learned that flesh was transparent to the newly discovered rays, whereas bones were opaque to them.

COUNT DE BEAUFORT'S CHRISTMAS STORY (Can His Countess Resist It?)

The Touching, Tender Dream of Lovely "Pete," Rich Papa "Killarty" and the Old Chicago Home, and the Unhappy End of Poor "Jack" in a Pullman Car

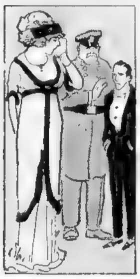


"And then that tumble down two flights of stairs."

COUNT DE BEAUFORT is the same young man of that name [illegible] who married the heiress daughter of Millionaire M. H. Kilgallon, of Chicago, and the vicissitudes of whose domestic career—real and imaginary—made interesting reading in the newspapers of two continents.

Whatever may have been the real facts of that episode, the rich and beautiful young wife and the athletic and engaging noble young husband separated, and that separation is still in force.

Rather late—or much too early—Count de Beaufort has written the Christmas story which appears on this page. Read it carefully—it may have a bearing on future events. For, under thin disguises of scenes and characters, it seems to tell the Count's own story, but,



"A maid had to call a policeman to protect her."

The pathetic, the tragic ending is, of course, fiction, since the Count de Beaufort still lives. One cannot be certain, but does it not seem as though, in this ingenious Christmas tale, the Count were taking a tender appeal to a living heroine, in the hope that a reconciliation with his wife may result?

Compare the charming domestic scene of the "dream," the tributes to the just but obstinate father-in-law in the story, and the allusions of equal independence of character on the hero's part, with newspaper accounts of what Count de Beaufort did [illegible] wrote. Then, as is [illegible] render judgment [illegible] weight of evidence.

All [illegible] agree that the young Count Alexander Albert von Mourik de Beaufort is a well-educated, widely-travelled, handsome [illegible], engaging personality. When Millionaire Kilgallon first [illegible] a [illegible] had [illegible] [illegible] a secret marriage [illegible] home to Chicago with [illegible] heiress confessed and was forgiven, and the Count and Countess were domi[illegible] [illegible] board, at [illegible]

[illegible]

It appears that the Count [illegible] [illegible] and [illegible] quarrels [illegible] and [illegible]

"He [illegible] chauffeurs [illegible] in succession," said Mr. Kilgallon. There are other accounts, [illegible]

not verified—of a bout without gloves with a large colored chauffeur who gave the Count a very black eye for his compliments on [illegible]. It is also written that the Count "butted in" whenever the Countess had the dressmaker but not when the bills fell due.

"I tried to induce him to go to work," said Father Kilgallon, "but he never would. Those photographs of him shovelling coal into a steel mill furnace were taken in our garage; he wore the chauffeur's overalls."

Now follow several [illegible] incidents: how the Count so abused his wife that a maid had to call a policeman to protect her; how threats [illegible] actual violence the Count compelled his wife to sign business documents, and then that tumble down two flights of stairs.

It was so related [illegible] publicity [illegible] one day the Count pursued his wife down the hall with such evidences of fury that, at the stairs, she fell over the bal[illegible] full [illegible] and fractur[illegible]

"When I was [illegible]," said Father [illegible] Kilgallon, "I took the Count into the library and [illegible] him up."

But enough for this side of the page. The Count is [illegible] and no doubt has his own side of the matter. [illegible] that he wrote the [illegible] Christmas story which herewith occupies the place of honor.

This Is Who They Are — And This Is What He Wrote

A CHRISTMAS DREAM

By Count v. Mourik de Beaufort

CHRISTMAS EVE! In a dismal, deserted Pullman car—as Pullman cars sometimes can be, but especially on evenings like this—sat a lone traveler, a young chap of, say, between twenty-five and thirty [illegible], dreamily through the large windows into the [illegible] passing fields and the raging snowstorm while the Pioneer Limited [illegible] one [illegible] after another off its [illegible] journey into the great Northwest.

The fields were thickly covered with snow, here and there a house nestled between the trees [illegible] the brightly lighted windows [illegible] could see a [illegible] gathered around the table. In one place [illegible] a tiny Christmas tree, and he caught a fleeting glimpse of its small lighted candles and those sweet little [illegible] each forming a unit of pleasure for the little ones around it.

And while the fast train was putting one mile after another between him and the one he loved best in the world the sprits of our lone traveller seemed to sink lower and lower. His thoughts were speeding back as fast as the train was going onward. Wondering, wondering what "She" might be doing now. After having sat there for a long time motionless he bent down, and, opening his suit case, took from it a large silver frame, holding the picture of a beautiful girl.

Three days since he left Chicago; three days since they said good-by. No tears had passed his eyes; he had been very brave; but now, on Christmas Eve, alone on a train going out once more into the gray, cold world, the mysterious unknown, his feelings overpowered him, and passionately, while the tears rolled down his face, he pressed the picture against his lips.

"Pete" was far, many thousand miles [illegible] but she was thinking of that lonely boy in that Pullman car, and she wished she had gone with him.

"Yo' berth am ready, sah," said the porter, pointing to [illegible] pair of curtains in front [illegible] berth in the car. But our [illegible] and with the picture pressed to his body, as if he wanted to protect it from the cold, he leaned back against the cushions, and gradually the spinning and buzzing of the gliding wheels on the smooth track sang him to sleep.

* * * * * * *

WHAT [illegible] it seemed to be those three there in that old-fashioned country house in Devonshire! Come with me, dear reader, and we will go a-peeping.

Do you see that [illegible] creature standing with her [illegible] "Pete"? Do you notice her [illegible] golden hair and those soft, great blue eyes? Of course you see at once that she is an American. And the man? We hear her call him "Jack." But, lo! who comes here? Isn't she pretty? Isn't she lovely? Just a [illegible] ribbons and laces—and, pat-te-pat-te-pa [illegible] in one arm a bull terrier pup, in the other a large doll. Let me present you to her. It is Eleanor, the four-year-old daughter of the house, usually called "Little Pete" or "Elli" for short.

Look at all those parcels, some of them bearing a foreign postmark. Presents from her to him and from him to her, but mostly addressed to "Her Majesty the Baby."

Come here; look over there in that corner near the large fireplace. Isn't that a wonderful tree? Look at all those little electric lights; see the snow; and, oh, those heaps and heaps of beautiful things, "just longing to be took," as Little Pete just remarked.

Hark! what is that? Ah, you know. It is one of those old-fashioned music boxes, playing a Christmas carol.

Our Little Pete—we mean the youngest Pete; both are so tiny—is the happiest of all. She is running from her "Mumsy" to her "Daddy" and from her "Daddy" to her "Mumsy," putting a nice, chubby arm now around one, then around the other.

And the man? Jack? He looked at his treasure—at his treasures, rather—and, with an arm around each of them he pressed them both closely against his breast and thanked God for all this happiness.

Some noise outside, the ringing of sleigh bells and the stamping of several horse hoofs, made "Pete" jump up and rush out into the hall where a cozy log fire is burning. With outstretched hands: "I am Awfully glad to see you people!" she greeted her guests, Lord Fraser and Major Hamilton and his charming wife. In her cordial reception there was that sincere charm of manner which greets you like a log fire when entering a strange room. It cheers you at once and makes you feel at home the moment you enter.

"How well you look, Irma!" greeted Dolly—Hamilton's wife. "And WHERE did you get those lovely pearls?"

"Pete" unconsciously put her hand up to her bare neck and fingered affectionately the beautiful string of pearls.

"A Christmas present papa brought over for me. Aren't they great? Come on," she added; "hurry up, you people, if you want to say good-night to Elli." (Pete seldom [illegible] her [illegible] "Little Pete." She was always somewhat jealous [illegible] and wanted to be, for Jack, his only "Pete" in the world.)

After they had taken off their various cloaks and wraps all went into the library, where they very soon were joined by Mr. and Mrs. Killarty, "Pete's" parents, who had come over on the Lusitania for the express purpose of spending Christmas with their daughter in England.

After every one in turn had admired the Christmas presents, and some of them had snatched a quick smoke, the butler announced dinner. Jack offered his arm to his young-looking mother-in-law; Mr. Killarty followed with Dollie Hamilton, while Lord Fraser—or, rather, "Jim," as we will call him in future—shared honors with Major Hamilton, alias "Bobs," in taking in the leading lady of our story, "Lady Pete," as she was popularly called in the neighborhood.

The tempered lights in the room, throwing their soft shadows on the faces of those around the table; the quiet and careful movements of the butler and his well-trained assistants—the whole picture was one that can only be defined by the word "atmosphere." There was something thoroughbred, something dignified, about the room, yet at the same time an entire absence of that tedious feeling of formality and conventionality. Everything and everybody seemed to be in perfect harmony, which is the great secret of successful entertaining.

Of course we must begin with the queen of the party, "Pete." We have already observed at the first glance that she is an American, one that has been brought up in European surroundings and has been able to blend that charming frank and natural American manner with the repose and "savoir vivre" of the manners of the Old World. Her face cannot be called otherwise but beautiful. Her features are chiselled as fine as a marble statue; the small nose, the fine lips, the chin and the two large blue eyes, crowned by a mass of golden hair, form a harmonious composition that is equalled rarely and excelled nowhere.

Mrs. Killarty is easily recognizable as "Pete's" mother. They look very much alike, and, it must be said, more like sisters than mother and daughter. From the way that she and her son-in-law converse, intimately and happily, it appears that the usual jokes and stories about the poor mother-in-law dragon does not fit the present case.

As to the men?

Mr. Killarty, with white hair which gives him a dignified appearance, steel gray eyes that are somewhat restless, taking in at one glance what it takes a European ten to grasp; short-set and clean-shaven, is a typical representative of the American railroad or steel king.

Major Hamilton, or rather "Bobs," is a chap of about thirty-five. He looks the typical Englishman of the novels.

"Jack" is somewhat of an enigma to strangers. Once he was asked about himself, and he laughingly remarked: "The best part about me is—'Pete.'" Somehow, after one gets to know him better, and when one has noticed the looks of love, devotion and admiration which go wirelessing to and fro between himself and his wife, one can understand how much truth there is in that remark. His age is about thirty-three, but usually he looks younger. His eyes, a greenish brown, are deep set, and somehow at times seem the marks of a life that has known intense suffering. No one really knows very much about him, but he is generally accepted as "a good fellow" and "a clean sportsman."

"Hm, speaking about rainbow chasing, did you ever read or see Maeterlinck's 'Blue Bird'? Two children leave their happy cottage and go in a vain search of the Blue Bird. After many wanderings they return and find the Blue Bird in a cage in their own home. It was exactly the some with me. Chased all over the world, and when I came back to London I found the loveliest little creature that ever twisted her tongue into 'Yankee talk' walking almost literally into my arms at the Carlton Hotel."

"And what did you do then?" somebody interrupted him one evening while several of the friends were sitting around the fireplace about tea time.

"What did I do then?" Jack turned to the speaker. "What a silly question to ask. To use hunting parlance, I put my hound to work at once, and of course we 'ran her to earth.' I assure you, old chap, if you had been chasing rainbows for seven years and you got a chance like that—well, you did not, because you would not have asked such a deuced stupid question—pardon my frankness, won't you? Well, well, 'what did I do then?' Pooh! Pete, YOU tell him what I did. I proposed that same day, did I not?"

"Yes, you never lacked nerve, Jack," retorted his [illegible]. "You surely did; but, as you may remember, dear sir, you were promptly refused."

Jack came back directly. "Well, maybe I was. What matter? After about thirty-four 'checks'" (please, American reader, this is still hunting parlance, and means a stop to give the hounds a rest or throw them on another scent; it has nothing to do with finance) "you surrendered, anyhow, and"—here he rose from his seat and, going over to where his wife was sitting, took her little head between his hands, and, while kissing her on the lips, finished his sentence—"and I am mighty glad you did, sweetheart."

It has been said that at first "Pa" Killarty and Jack did not get on very amiably. Looking at both of them as they sit there, one cannot be surprised at that. The wide American jaw of Killarty and the big underlip and high forehead of Jack show sufficiently that both like their own way. Still, they seemed to have settled the [illegible] in the end with the old measure of "give and take."

At "Killarty Hall" smoking is allowed all over the house, so the men took their cigarettes and cigars into the drawing room. "Pete," who besides her many other accomplishments has also that of a very good voice, opened the piano and with her clear and warm expression, full of quality, appropriately sang various Christmas songs, and finished with "I Love You Truly"—which is Jack's favorite.

* * * * * * *

"Say, mister—he, he—we'll be in Seattle in twenty minutes," said the conductor, while shaking our sleeping friend. And he repeated: "Say, mister, wake up; we'll be in Seattle in a minute."

But "mister" never was going to wake up again. After the train arrived in Seattle a station doctor examined the body of the lonely passenger. "Heart failure," was the verdict.

The body was taken to the morgue. And all the while the frame with the picture of the beautiful girl was clasped in his stiff fingers and pressed against his breast. With a smile of contentment on the quiet face, this young chap, probably dreaming of his "Pete" and his beloved England, had noiselessly passed into the great beyond on Christmas morn.

An Appetizing Lot of Solid French Family Dishes (No. 16)

By A. ESCOFFIER.

I GIVE to-day some standard French family dishes—"des plats bourgeois," as we say. They all fall within practical range of the resources and apparatus of a modest household, but I must add that they all require special care in cooking. Any good housewife or domestic cook should be able to prepare them perfectly.

With one possible exception they need not be expensive. Any one of these dishes, I believe, will make an attractive and appetizing feature of a dinner in the homes of my American readers.

CABBAGE SOUP A LA POLONAISE.

CHOOSE some firm, round, white cabbages. Remove the leaves and wash them in plenty of water, and chop them up in strips about an inch wide. Chop up a large onion, put it in a saucepan on a gentle fire. As soon as the onion has taken a nice light brown color mix with it three tablespoonfuls of flour. Then add the cabbage and mix the whole well together. Add three quarts of boiling water and let it continue to boil for several minutes. Add two pounds of breast of beef, a bay leaf, salt, pepper and a bunch of parsley. Cover the saucepan and let it boil at a gentle fire from three to three and a half hours.

Remove the beef, cut away the meat, divide it in pieces about an inch square, put the pieces back in the liquor. Skim the soup and pour it into the tureen. You may serve with it some slightly soured cream.

LOBSTER A LA MENAGERE.

TAKE a live lobster, remove the claws and break them to facilitate the removal of the meat after cooking. Split the body in two lengthwise and split each of these pieces in two by separating the head from the tail. Remove the pouch, called the "queen," near the head, which generally contains some gravel. Put aside the intestines and the coral, which will be used in finishing the dish. Season the large pieces with salt and pepper. The following quantities of sauce are calculated for a lobster of one and a half to two pounds.

Heat in a flat saucepan four tablespoonfuls of olive oil and a tablespoonful of butter. Put the pieces of lobster in the saucepan so that they are all turned on the meat side. Let them harden for several minutes. Add a small glass of cognac and a large glass of white wine, two chopped chalotts, six medium-sized tomatoes skinned, seeded and chopped up, and a little parsley.

Cover the saucepan and let it cook at a gentle fire for fifteen to twenty minutes. Then put the pieces of lobster on a dish and remove the meat. Keep the meat hot in a saucepan with its cooking liquor. At the time of serving add the intestines and coral, which you have set aside and crushed with a fork and mixed with a good tablespoonful of fine butter.

Serve as hot as possible, accompanied by rice, cooked as a pilaff, by preference, or simply with salt water.

SAUCE BECHAMEL A LA MENAGERE.

THIS is one of the most famous and essential of all French sauces. Every housekeeper should become familiar with it. This is an extremely simple recipe for the sauce and a housekeeper would do well to keep it always handy.

Boil a quart of milk, to which add an onion with two cloves stuck in it, a bay leaf and several sprigs of parsley, the whole tied together to form a bouquet. Season with several peppers and a quarter of an ounce of salt. Mix four soupspoonfuls of good flour in a little cold milk, stir with a wooden spoon and pour it in the boiling milk, continually stirring it so that the flour may not stick to the bottom.

At the first boiling remove the saucepan and put it on a gentle fire. Then let it boil gently for twelve or fifteen minutes. When it is thoroughly cooked pass the sauce through a fine strainer and mix with it four good tablespoonfuls of fine butter or the same quantity of fresh cream.

ECONOMICAL LOBSTER SOUP

WITH the shells of the lobster you can prepare an excellent soup. Crush the shells very fine in a mortar, put them in a saucepan with if possible a quart of bouillon or simply a quart of hot water. In the latter case add about a quarter of an ounce of salt and a pinch of pepper, and let it boil for several minutes. Add four tablespoonfuls of cream of rice. Thicken the soup by stirring in butter and flour and let it boil eight or ten minutes on a gentle fire. Pass it through a fine strainer into another saucepan, which you must keep warm.

At the time of serving add a tablespoonful of butter, several spoonful of cream and five to six spoonsful of rice cooked in salt water.

QUAILS WITH GRAPES.

TAKE some quails of good size, allowing one for each guest. Clean them with care and put them in a saucepan, with a good piece of butter. Let them cook ten to twelve minutes, according to the size of the quails. As soon as they are well cooked arrange them in an earthenware dish, which you have previously warmed. Surround the quail with large, white grapes, skinned and with seeds removed as far as possible. Then remove from the saucepan the butter which has remained from the cooking and replace it by several tablespoonfuls of grape juice. Add a little good veal gravy and let it boil several minutes, pour over the quails and serve at once.

Six grapes should be allowed for each quail and one tablespoonful of veal gravy for each one.

OMELET WITH CHERRIES — AU KIRSCH.

PREPARE an omelet with sugar, according to the ordinary method, then stuff it with preserved cherries. Arrange it on a large metal platter, sprinkle it with sugar and surround it with old Kirsch, which you light on placing the omelet on the table.

UNEXPECTED NEW TRIUMPHS

Surpri

Colonel Kitty Baker, the Dashing Commander of the Newly Organized Territorial Militia Regiment of the British Army.

ONE by one the arguments of those opposed to suffrage for women have been exploded and turned against them. Here are the six reasons commonly advanced why women should not vote, and elsewhere on this page is shown how recent events have disproved every one of them:

1—That women do not want to vote and would not use the ballot if it was given to them.

2—That if they did go to the polls, it would be a demoralizing, unwomanly spectacle; furthermore, political discussion would cause differences and estrangement between husband and wife.

3—That, in any case, women would blunder, delay, be confused, and mark their ballots wrong.

4—That intelligent and respectable women would stay at home on election day, and that only painted and beribboned women would be seen at the polls.

5—That it is dangerous to trust woman with the ballot, because she would be guided by her emotions and vote for the handsomest candidate or the party with the silliest platform.

6—And, anyhow, woman ought not to have a voice in public affairs, because she is not fitted to bear the burden of military duty, and could not possibly go to war.

It now turns out that wherever the ballot has been given to woman it has been demonstrated that she is not only eager to vote but that she votes intelligently and with less delay and error than the men.

Instead of women being contaminated by the polls, it has been found that the atmosphere of the voting places has been very much purified wherever women have been admitted.

As far as the evidence shows anything, it seems to prove that our public life is enriched and enlightened by giving women the right to vote.

Overwhelming Evidence That Women Do Want to Vote.

ONE of the commonest stock arguments of anti-suffragists is that women do not want to vote and would not use the ballot if it was given to them.

This argument has been disproved in every place from California to Finland where the suffrage has been given to women.

The latest knockdown blow to this poor old argument was given by the recent Los Angeles municipal election, in which women exercised the suffrage for the first time.

It has been calculated that fully ninety-five per cent of the newly enfranchised women voters cast their ballots in the election of Alexander, the citizens' candidate, over Harriman, the Socialist. The proportion of women voting even at this first trial was greater than among the men.

The election also showed that women are disposed to be conservative. It was estimated that seventy-five per cent of the women voted for the citizens' candidate against the Socialist. The election followed immediately after the confession of the McNamara brothers.

The women showed a perfect ability to discern the real issues in the election," said the secretary of the Citizens' Campaign Committee. "A large proportion of them were wives and sisters of union labor men who might have been expected from their associations to vote for the Socialist candidate, yet they voted for the Alexander ticket."

Before the election the Socialists confidently declared that the women would be on their side, but the result proves them to be entirely mistaken.

The same election has served the purpose of exposing the poverty of argument of some of the anti-Suffragists. Immediately after this election, Mrs. Arthur M. Dodge, president of the National Association opposed to Woman Suffrage, felt that this episode of world-wide interest called for some explanation from her side, and she made it the text for a long statement.

Mrs. Dodge admitted that the women voters came out in overwhelming numbers, that they voted on the side of good government and morality, and from all this she concluded that they ought not to have the vote. Here are some of the choicest tidbits from her statement:

"The figures show conclusively that the women voted overwhelmingly against prohibition and for good government. The intelligent women of Los Angeles have placed themselves emphatically on record against fanatical or radical movements. They realize that temperance is a matter of education and not a matter of legislation, and that a stable government cannot be maintained by theories, however roseate the theories may appear.

"I consider the result of the election a triumph for the women opposed to Suffrage. In the last analysis, the vast majority of women are conservative and when forced to vote will vote against all radical or extreme measures. There are few conditions that could arise, however, to parallel the Los Angeles conditions that compelled the women to vote in order to outvote the theorists and dreamers.

"There was too much at stake in the Los Angeles election for the women to remain away from the polls, since the burden of Suffrage had been laid upon their shoulders.

"The women opposed to Suffrage are asking that such a burden be not placed upon woman and that she be saved from the political warfare into which the ballot will hurl her—even as it did the women of Los Angeles. We are willing to let the men bear the brunt of political battles, as they must bear arms in time of danger."

Wherever the suffrage has been given to women it is freely used. In the United States women possess the suffrage on equal terms with men in Wyoming, Colorado, Utah, Idaho and California.

In Kansas they have school suffrage, municipal suffrage and bond suffrage. School suffrage for women prevails in twenty-nine States.

Montana gives tax-paying women the right to vote on questions submitted to tax-payers. Iowa gives women bond suffrage. Louisiana gives women the right to vote on all questions of taxation. In Michigan all women tax-payers have the suffrage. In New York a woman can vote to raise money by tax or assessment in towns and villages.

In Great Britain women can vote for all elected officers except Members of Parliament. In Australia New Zealand, the Isle of Man, Iceland, Finland and Norway the women have full parliamentary suffrage.

Women have municipal suffrage in Ontario, Nova Scotia, Manitoba, Quebec, British Columbia and the Northwest Territory.

In all these places women have availed themselves freely of their privilege and show in some places a larger proportion of actual voters than the men and in others a practically equal proportion.

Some remarkable figures upon this point have just been published by the New Zealand Year Book. In 1899, the first year in which women voted there were on the rolls in round numbers 190,000 names of men and 109,000 names of women. About 130,000 of these men and 90,000 of the women actually voted. That is about 67 per cent of the possible vote and 80 per cent of the female vote was cast.

Subsequent elections have seen a rise in the number of male electors from 190,000 to 295,000, and of female from 109,000 to 240,000. Of these about 240,000 men and 190,000 women voted at the last general election. This is a percentage for the men of slightly over 80 per cent, and for the women of 79 1 per cent.

The inevitable conclusion from this is that women exercise the suffrage much more fully than men used to do but that the men have been stimulated by the entrance of women into politics to perform their political duties more thoroughly.

No Demoralizing or Unwomanly Spectacles at Any Place Where Women Have Voted

ANTI-SUFFRAGISTS continue to repeat the argument that if women did go to the polls, it would be a demoralizing and unwomanly spectacle.

Women vote in many countries and States (enumerated elsewhere on this page), and in all these places there has been no report of demoralizing or unwomanly spectacles.

The latest refutation of the anti-suffrage argument here considered was given by the Los Angeles municipal election. Here was an election in which angry passions were most likely to be aroused. Two representatives of organized labor were accused of wholesale murder, and the majority of the laboring population felt that an attack was being made on their cause. One candidate for the Mayoralty openly took the [illegible]

No recent election in the country has furnished so good an excuse for disorder. Yet what happened? It passed off with a display of good feeling that would have been remarkable at an ordinary New York municipal election.

"Young women," says one report, "on the arms of husbands and escorts chatted gayly as they walked to drop their first votes in the ballot boxes. Women in groups walked to the polling places, while others rode in automobiles. The canvassing was general, and long lines were formed throughout all residence districts. While they waited patiently, neighbors chatted, women exchanged politics."

"In these lines also were women with babies in their arms. The women were treated with the greatest gallantry. Many mothers went to the polls pushing baby carriages, and often father took care of baby while mother voted."

One of the interesting episodes of the day was the voting of Mrs. Caroline M. Severance, founder of the first woman's club in America, who had waited ninety-two years for this opportunity.

Equally interesting was the appearance of Mrs. Katherine Shinn in Precinct 110. She is ninety-one years old. She was brought to the polls by her daughters, Mrs. Mary Kenny and Mrs. Sallie Fertig. Mrs. Shinn insisted on carrying her own ballot to the box and watching it counted.

Counting Mrs. Shinn herself, four generations of her family voted. There were her daughters, then her granddaughter, Miss Elizabeth Kenny, and finally her great-grandson, George Mayer, seventy years younger than herself. Six women over eighty-four voted in this precinct.

These and similar episodes also tend to dispose of the argument that woman suffrage would tend to create dissension between husband and wife and between members of a family. Apparently the civilized husband is quite willing to allow his wife such independence of thought as is involved in choosing a political party, and is as willing to listen to her reasons as to those of a fellow voter of his own sex. Husband and wife voted cheerfully together in Los Angeles, and, of course, in many instances for opposing candidates.

Another anti-suffrage argument is that women would blunder, delay, be confused and mark their ballots wrong if they voted.

This argument also was refuted by that useful Los Los Angeles election, which has excited world-wide interest. In this election the women, although they were voting for the first time, voted more quickly and with a better understanding of the ballot than the men. They did not blunder, delay, become confused or mark their ballots wrong to any appreciable extent.

"They voted at the rate of ninety to ninety-four a minute," said an election official. They had received instruction in advance at the voting schools and mastered the system with remarkable quickness.

Again we are told by some anti-suffragists that respectable women would stay at home on election day and that only painted and beribboned women would be seen at the polls.

At Los Angeles it was noted that practically all the women voters were of respectable appearance, and that the disreputable female element was conspicuous by its absence. All the evidence seems to show that the women of the latter class do not care to appear where respectable women are present in large numbers. It has elsewhere been pointed out that elderly women were conspicuous at Los Angeles.

Valuable evidence on this point is furnished by the case of Finland. This is an ancient state of very democratic and progressive tendencies, which had the misfortune to fall under the dominion of Russia.

The Czar deprived Finland of its local assembly and constitution, but during the troubles attending the Japanese war the Finns succeeded in regaining their political rights. The women took a leading part in this movement, for while the Russian police were watching every prominent male Finn, the women were distributing literature and organizing meetings.

On the restoration of the Finnish Assembly, the women received full political rights. They not only obtained the franchise, but the right to sit as members of Parliament. There are now fourteen women members of the Finnish Parliament.

Painted women have had no influence in Finnish elections. The women members have passed a law punishing "mashers" with fine and imprisonment. By another law they have provided pensions for needy mothers according to the number of children they have to support.

Another law passed by the Finnish women sentences drunkards and those who assist in making drunkards to long terms of imprisonment. The women legislators have concentrated their attention on questions relating to women, children and morality, and have been content to let men take the lead in other matters.

Women have probably played a greater part in the politics of Colorado than in any other State, and there their influence has been exerted on the side of morality in many difficult questions. A woman in that State, Mrs. Francis S. Lee, has served temporarily as Speaker of the Assembly.

The women of Colorado were the first to propose and advocate the referendum, but their proposal was defeated by the men because the latter did not know what it was and thought it might be something dangerous.

Again and again the women of Colorado have intervened to prevent the election of a man whose morals could not bear the light. They prevented the nomination of such a man for Secretary of State this year.

The Colorado Women's Legislative Committee keeps the women fully informed concerning the doings of the Legislature, because the reports in the daily newspapers are not sufficiently explicit for that purpose. Every bill under discussion is examined and sent to the Legislature with the indorsement or approval of the women. They search for all "jokers" and "weak spots."

Women have secured for Colorado the Juvenile Court law, which has become a model all over the world; new child labor laws, new marriage laws and one of the best scientific educational systems in the country.

Owing to their influence the age of protection for girls is eight on instead of fourteen, which is the average in the United States.

No woman in Colorado may work more than eight hours a day at tasks which require her to be on her feet.

In 1909 the women passed laws providing pensions for teachers and an amendment to the Labor Bureau law creating the office of factory inspector.

The women of Denver in 1909 carried an election in which the main issues were municipal ownership of water supply, temperance and other reform measures. The old bosses tried to befog the issues by printing a ballot containing nearly ten thousand words of fine printing.

There was one fake liquor-selling amendment following the one submitted by the temperance people; there were two fake water amendments following the one submitted by the Citizens' party, and there were fake as well as real initiative, referendum and recall amendments.

In an ordinary American election the voters would have been hopelessly confused, but the women organized their forces so carefully that they carried all their points. The day before election the W. C. T. U. held afternoon and evening sessions in twenty-five churches to teach voters, both men and women, how to mark their ballots.

Mrs. Louise Kerwin, a Democratic member of the Colorado Assembly, has secured the passage of a law forbidding the marriage of diseased, epileptic, consumptive, imbecile and feeble-minded persons.

Such facts as these disprove the charge that the disreputable element would take control if women had the vote.

The anti-suffragists contradict themselves in two arguments that are commonly advanced—one argument being that painted women would predominate if women went into politics, and the other that women voters would be misled by a specious pretense of virtue in a candidate into voting for a hypocrite and a thief. Obviously the women voters cannot be both disreputable and priggishly moral at the same time, and yet these arguments are put forward daily.

The elections at Denver and Los Angeles, however, have proved that they have neither one fault nor the other. At Denver they rejected a prohibition proposal because they felt that it was put forward by men who had other ends in view and that those ends were deadly to the best interests of the city. At Los Angeles they rejected a prohibition amendment, although they must have been in favor of temperance, on the general ground that such a measure would not secure the result it was aimed at.

Yet we have seen from the record of facts that the most virtuous, venerable and respectable women were in control at these elections.

It seems true that women voters will pay more attention to the private morals of a candidate, as distinguished from his public record, than the men voters will pay, but it has also been shown that they will not allow this tendency to blind them to any great principle of public honesty and efficiency which is at stake.

organization of the Amazons ed some years ago by that ller Sir Richard Burton but aspect when a European sol- dier testifies to their fighting ability in these days of hot dispute over the suffrage question

It was as recently as the middle of the eighteenth century that the King of Dahomey discovered that his women made better soldiers than his men. The King's army having been greatly reduced by war he armed a great number of women, and with these he attacked the combined host of the Whydahs and Popos and defeated them terribly

Gezo, a nineteenth century King, greatly increased the female force, and his son, Gelele, still further developed it

Gelele caused every girl to be brought to him before marriage, and if she pleased him he kept her. Some became his wives and the others his finest soldiers

The Amazons are nominally wives of the King. They cannot be touched by a subject on pain of death They never leave their quarters unless preceded by a bell to drive men from the road

They meet men only on the march and in war. At parades they are separated from the male soldiers by a bamboo fence. When captured in war the Amazons will never consent to become the wives of the victors, and are usually killed for their heroic obstinacy

The King often pays distinguished strangers the compliment of placing them in command of his body-guard, but their does not even entitle them to the privilege of inspecting the corps

The three corps are divided into five arms. First come the Agbarya, or blunderbuss women. They are the biggest and strongest of the force, and each is accompanied by an attendant carrying ammunition. With them rank the Zo-hu-nun, or Carbineers; the Gannunlan, Sure-to-Kill Company, and the Acthi, or bayoneteers.

The second arm consists of the Elephant Huntresses, who are held to be the bravest. Then there are the Nyekplo-hen-to, or razor-women, a very light force

The infantry, or line women, form the staple of the force, and are armed with old muskets.

The fifth arm consists of the Go-hen-to, or archeresses, who in King Gezo's time were young girls, the pick of the army, and very fine dancers. They are armed with the peculiar Dahomeyan bow, a quiver of poisoned light cane shafts and a small knife lashed with a lanyard to the wrist. They are distinguished by scanty attire, by a tattoo extending to the knee and by an ivory bracelet on the left arm

Burton gives a long and interesting account of a state ceremony in which the Amazons played a leading part

"First came the five great bones of the empire—the A... the Mingan the Meu, the Yevogan and the Audde jan," he says "The Min-gan had a bill hook in her left hand as executioneress of the inside; the others used staves or sticks, and all carried swords at their left sides.

"These five were habited in long Hausa robes of red silk, the upper garb light, and the skirt heavy, and two wore tin crowns over red calico. They were followed by the lesser dignitaries in blue striped togas of similar cut, and some had their heads bound with white calico, like the male singers and fetisheers

"Then came the captainesses, forty-two in number, corresponding with the men. First stalked two 'silver half heads' with pouches on their right sides, cartridge boxes round their waists, and bill hooks whose handles were swathed in cloth

"A pair of bayonet women followed with silver sharks on their red liberty caps. Number nine was a very bulky figure in the cook's bonnet of the Minan, or Mad Cap Company, described at Kana. She is one of the captainesses of the right or Min-gan's side

"Some had shaggy skull-caps, like pepper-corn hair, stained a deep indigo and others had applied the dye to their locks, which contrasted well with their silver ornaments Others had big fool's caps of stuffs striped white, blue and red and hanging over the shoulders All wore sashes with the ends depending in front, and carried, at half-cock, muskets or blunderbusses, with the muzzle cap off.

"Some were decorated with a human skull, or with a lower jaw, fixed to a thin brass plate dangling fr the waist. At the end of the performance they formed in line before the King, saluted, first with the right hand; secondly with presented guns and knives and again disappeared within the harem."

This concluding tribute to the Dahomeyan Amazons is paid by Burton

"Of course they are savage as wounded gor... more cruel far than their brethren in arms"

The erudite Burton recalls many female fighters of the past. The native princes of India, especially the of Hyderabad, maintained for centuries a fema... whose courage and devotion were remarkable

There was Penthesilea, Queen of the Amazons Judith and Candace; the wife of Aban Ibn Saib; Joan of Arc; Margaret of Anjou; Black Agnes; Jeanne Ha... ette, and Begum Sombre

"Many a fair form was found stark on the field of Waterloo," says Burton "During the late Indian mutiny the Ranis were as a rule more manly than Rajahs."

At the present moment a corps of Chinese women under the command of Colonel Miss Sun Su Sieng is fighting bravely for the new Chinese republic. The Amazons are said to number 1,000, and they behaved with greater gallantry than the men under fire at Tien Tsin.

And now we must not forget the conduct of the militant suffragettes during the campaign for the suffrage which is still being waged in England. Whatever may be the opinion as to the wisdom of violent methods there can be no doubt that the suffragettes have shown physical courage of the highest order

In their attempts to reach Parliament they fought thousands of stalwart policemen. They kicked and bit and scratched until the policemen felt that they were dealing with hungry tigers. They chained themselves to railings and crawled through coal-holes. They risked their lives in a dozen ways, simply to get the vote. They literally fought their way on to the floor of the House of Commons.

When they were sent to prison they refused to eat and they submitted to torture in the efforts of the authorities to feed them. This stopped the use of force Then it became apparent that some of these women would literally starve themselves to death as a protest against the deprivation of their rights, and the government was at last forced to release them.

Many English women have shown a willingness and ability to do military service even under present conditions. When the territorial army, the new auxiliary force of the British army, was organized it was soon found that not enough men would volunteer to make it efficient. A women's corps was then organized and there was no difficulty in getting recruits.

These women wear regular military uniforms and have been divided into cavalry and infantry Their first intention is to give aid to the wounded in war, but they are trained to use arms. Whatever duty they undertake they will run practically the same risks as men.

Why Women Won't Vote for the Handsomest Candidate

IT is frequently urged that women are too emotional to be entrusted with the ballot. It is said that they could never resist the temptation to vote for the handsomer candidate, and that no matter what a man's merits might be, he would receive little support from the women if his opponent happened to be good looking Experience proves the contrary The recent election in Los Angeles did not furnish a very satisfactory test in this respect, for there was little to choose between the two candidates as far as personal appearance went. The probabilities are, however, that had the women voters been asked to choose between Harriman, the Socialist candidate, and Alexander, his opponent, on the grounds of their looks solely, Harriman would have received a fair majority, whereas in fact Alexander received the greater percentage of the women's votes

In other elections, in Colorado, Wyoming and other States where woman suffrage is universal, it has frequently happened that the less prepossessing of the candidates has received the majority of the women's votes even where the difference was most marked

In this respect the conduct of women juries is instructive. One of the old objections raised against admitting women to the jury-box is that an ugly man would never be acquitted by a female jury, while an Adonis would never be convicted though his guilt were most convincingly proved. A pretty female plaintiff would never win her case if women had anything to say in the matter, it is said, while a plain one would never lose.

This has not proved to be the case. In Denver quite recently a jury composed of women was called upon to decide a dispute between an unprepossessing tailor and an equally unprepossessing woman customer of his who refused to pay for a dress he had made for her

According to anti-suffrage theories, as there was nothing in the personality of the male plaintiff to arouse the admiration of the woman jurors, their sympathies should ... adversary On the other hand, as the woman defendant was ... enough to arouse the envy of the ... of the jury," she should have had a ... advantage over her opponent. As a ... however, the jury found in favor of the man, deciding the case entirely ...

... A. King, of Los Angeles, was charged with printing a story in violation of the law and tried by a jury of women. Although the man had bitterly opposed the granting of woman suffrage, the women jurors acquitted him, showing that they were capable of impartiality in the highest degree

The result in this case and in many other similar cases in Colorado, Washington and California would seem to show, indeed, that in this respect women make better jurors than men. It has long been a scandal of our criminal jurisprudence that a beautiful woman defendant can seldom be convicted by a male jury, no matter how clearly her guilt is established Male jurors are not proof against woman's charms, but our limited experience with woman juries seems to indicate very clearly that women in the jury-box are not influenced at all by such considerations

A New York lawyer declares that the two young women in the Stokes case, whose youth and beauty must have made a strong impression upon the male jurors, would not have fared so well had the evidence against them been presented to a jury of their own sex

But what has been shown in the case of woman juries is undoubtedly true of women voters, too, and experience indicates very strongly that in questions of public interest women are quite able to and do dissociate the personal element involved and to decide them on their merits—in many cases more satisfactorily than men can

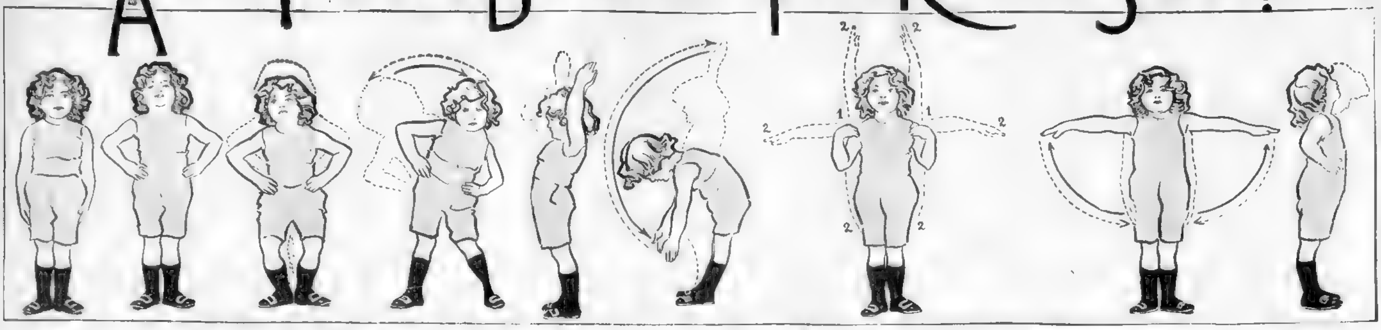
ARE YOUR BABIES THE RIGHT SIZE?



Simple Exercises to Bring About the Proportions of the Old Greek Statues of Children Which Science Now Says Are Absolutely Perfect

Statue of the Child of Pluto, by Kephisodotus, 375 B. C. in the National Museum at Athens.

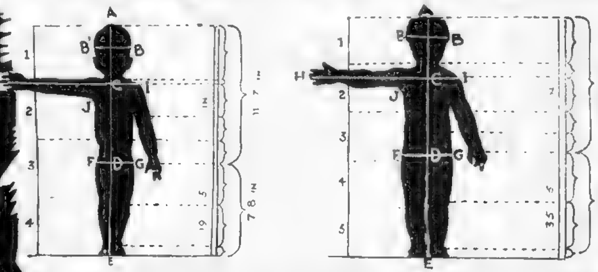


Diagram Showing the Correct Greek Proportions of a 1 Year Old and a 2 Year Old Child.

The One Year Old—The Figures on the Left Show the Number of Heads in the Height. The Scale on Right Shows the Length in Inches; the Small brackets on the Right Show the Height of Each Part in Inches, on the Scale; the Larger Brackets Indicate the Proportions of the Legs to the Upper Part of the Body.

The Two Year Old—The Numbers Are the Same as in Diagram One. The Height Is Now 5 Heads. The Legs Bear the Proportion of 4 to 5 to the Upper Part.

The Statue of "The Boy and the Bird, in the Villa Borghese at Rome.

AS NEARLY [illegible] the ideals of [illegible] and strength [illegible] form are best represented [illegible] tain masterpieces of [illegible] statuary. Physiologists [illegible] athletic instructors and [illegible] to-day agree that [illegible] are the more nearly [illegible] closer their bodies [illegible] limbs approach the measurements of those ancient [illegible] marble.

But it is apparent [illegible] maturity cannot [illegible] developed [illegible] The child [illegible] miniature [illegible] the proportions of a [illegible] body and [illegible] from those [illegible] How, then [illegible] child is so proportioned as [illegible] naturally develop [illegible] of a mature [illegible]

Just how [illegible] question is answered by a celebrated German physiologist, Professor Ernest Nie[illegible], German, whose interesting discovery was first described at a Congress of Mothers and Teachers recently held in Berlin. Professor Ne[illegible]erman declares that the later [illegible] of children by Praxiteles, [illegible] masters of ancient Greek art, are as sure a guide to the perfect natural proportions of [illegible] form in childhood as [illegible] celebrated sculptures are with respect to maturity.

Moreover these [illegible] discovered, and perpetuated in marble, the fact that not only are the proportions of children different from those of grown persons, but that as a child grows its proportions are altered, and there is all the difference in the world between the proportions of a new-born [illegible] and the same child when it is two years old. The head does not grow as rapidly as the rest of body, and therefore has to start very large in order to be of the proper proportion at maturity.

In the new-born infant, for instance [illegible] 17 inches long [illegible] the adult [illegible] is precisely [illegible]

[illegible] the body [illegible] the pelvic point, the end of the torso [illegible] upper section of the [illegible] lower is as 1 to 2 in the [illegible] infant, but when that same child is two years of age the proportion is as 5 to 4 and in the adult will be as 8 to 7.

In a new-born child the legs are [illegible] very short, but the proportion of the arm to the body remains the same at all ages. The length of the arm from the end of the middle finger to the centre of the chest should be equal to the length of the body.

[illegible] of the head [illegible] parts, also [illegible] ages. The [illegible] than the face [illegible] the brain-[illegible] length of the face [illegible] child's head shows a [illegible] of brain to face of 5 to 7, [illegible] year-old of 9 to 9, the fourteen-year-old of 12 to [illegible] and the adult of 13 to 11.

How successful the Greek artists of the best period were in [illegible] the child's [illegible] illustrated in the statue of the Child of Pluto executed by Kephisodotus about 375 B. C., and now in the National Museum at Athens. Here it is possible to study [illegible] beautiful chubbiness of the figure and to note the size of the head and its proportion to the body. Unfortunately the arms are gone, but we may be sure that they were right in proportion and very beautiful.

A more perfect example of the work of the ancient sculptors, from the side of preservation [illegible] not so impressive [illegible] the Boy and the Bird in the Villa Borghese at Rome. Here is all the charm of babyhood as only the great sculptors could reproduce it. This child was not more than three years of age and [illegible] both by parents and sculptors with great advantage, when they wish to see the ideal of the child [illegible]

If you want your children to be up to the standard of the Greek statues it can be accomplished if you will give [illegible] to the exercises [illegible] This is promised by Professor Ne[illegible]derman, whose nine exercises for [illegible] are [illegible] on this page. [illegible] child is frail or [illegible] not continue so, and after your physician has corrected any [illegible] be present [illegible] prevent recurrence of the disease by giving the child [illegible] strengthening food, as much open air life as possible, and daily exercises in progressive gymnastics, as suggested by the diagrams on this page.

Even if [illegible] could conform in every respect to diagrams and statues it must [illegible] to this standard, and this is possible only by developing its muscles, just as the Greeks did with their children.

An eminent French physician, Dr. P. Michaux, says: "Not a week passes, hardly a day, that [illegible] physician is not called in [illegible] school or home to correct or treat [illegible] which are due [illegible] nothing but [illegible] development of the children. This is especially true in deformities of the spine, which are both painful and dangerous.

[illegible] these deformities might have been prevented by sane, methodical exercises, which can not be begun too early. All of these little troubles bring about other most serious in their effect [illegible] body and soul."

Be careful to see that [illegible] stands erect, keeps the fingers of the hand close together, and [illegible] forms all of the exercises [illegible] slowly.

Be especially careful not to [illegible] the child, but let him or her [illegible] the exercises and stop while [illegible] interested. Rather err on the side of gentleness than of strenuousness.

If the little ones are carefully trained in these exercises you will note with pleasure that after a few weeks or months they are much nearer the ideal figure of the Greek statues, and all the healthier for approaching this well-established ideal of childhood.

Don't Shower the Bride with Inefficient Pots and Pans

By Prof. Charles Bernard, Household Efficiency Expert.

SOMEBODY should invent an umbrella [illegible] tin shower. Pity the poor bride whose friends [illegible] her to a tin shower. They mean well—that's [illegible] She is about to furnish her new home and all who know the dear girl wish to contribute to the outfit, and they send her many duplicates and enough to stock a small [illegible]

Soon the wise bride comes to her new home and promptly packs the whole glittering stock away, for she knows that the modern scientific kitchen calls for very few cooking utensils, that these must be efficient, and she is doubtful of some of the [illegible] stove. All she asks is a clear kitchen [illegible] is a sink with hot and cold water and a stove and a table she can provide the rest for a very little money. She notes with [illegible] that her fuel will be gas [illegible] and alcohol gas in the [illegible] the stove is the [illegible] cooking utensils are placed in direct contact with the fire, and that [illegible] high cooking efficiency and the [illegible] economy of fuel and labor.

[illegible] are well furnished. The kitchen alone requires an outfit. The problem is to buy and cook a dinner for her husband before 6, and it is now 4:15. She [illegible] a dinner of fish, potatoes, onions, fruit salad, steamed apples [illegible] butter and cake. She goes shopping [illegible] and kitchen and returns in half an [illegible] one cooking utensil and a few small [illegible] from the 10-cent store—fork, spoon, knife, apple corer, etc.—and soon after the things from the market and grocery arrive, with oil, vinegar, pepper, salt, etc.

What made her think she could cook that dinner with one utensil? Why, it would take four utensils and an hour's time—unless she was a particularly efficient woman. Let's see about that.

The pot is inefficient and wasteful because the shape is wrong [illegible] controls the position of the water that is to be heated, and this position is not the best for heating it quickly and [illegible] No doubt the bride found in the tin shower just such a pot and put it away on a high shelf, for she would not be so unkind as to give such a poor thing to anybody.

Figure 2 shows the top of the same stove, and resting on the grid is a wide and shallow pan for boiling water. This pan covers the whole burner, and we see that it flattens out the gas flames so that they cover the entire bottom of the pan, and, as it is wider than the burner, only the points of the outside flames curl up the sides of the pan. The dotted lines show that the water is much wider than deep and lies in the best position to absorb the heat of the flames that completely cover the bottom of the pan.

This utensil is efficient, because its shape compels the water to rest in a sheet over the fire. The pan saves fuel by using all the heat, and saves time because it uses the heat in the best possible manner.

The bride used a utensil having just such a wide and shallow pan. She called it her water pan. With it came another pan that fits into the waterpan, and that is called the foodpan. With the two pans was a cover. It was with this double pan utensil that she cooked a most excellent dinner for her surprised and delighted husband, and when she told him that the utensil cost just one-fifty—well, joy reigned.

She began getting dinner by placing a pint of water in the large pan and placing the pan over one lighted burner of her gas stove. Note that! One burner! She put the cover on the pan to save heat while the water was coming to the boiling point. She then [illegible] four apples with a damp cloth [illegible] each one and then placed them in the foodpan and added a teaspoonful of sugar to each apple and put a little pat of butter on top. Then changing the cover from the waterpan to the foodpan she put the foodpan inside the [illegible] pan, and as the boiling water was sending up a cloud of live steam this hot steam forced its way through small holes in the side of the foodpan, and the cooking began.

As the apples could not possibly burn, she was free to set the table, cut the bread, get the butter and start the fruit salad. In exactly twenty minutes the apples were cooked to perfection, and she removed the foodpan and placed them in individual serving dishes and poured over each some of the rich syrup formed by the water of condensation from the steam, the sugar and butter and the juices of the fruit extracted by the hot steam. She then added a little more water to the waterpan on the stove, washed the foodpan, wiped it dry and put it in the waterpan. She then laid two pounds of fresh cod in the middle of the pan and placed on one side of the fish peeled and quartered two potatoes and on the other side six white onions, cut up fine, and put on the cover. As the dry fish could not burn she finished the salad of sliced apples and bananas and ran upstairs to make herself presentable dinner. At 5:55 p. m. the dinner was served.

So it was she cooked a good and appetizing dinner in one utensil over one burner of a gas stove at a saving of fuel and labor that would not be possible by our ordinary housekeeping methods. The secret of it all is this. The woman herself was efficient, her single utensil was efficient and her fuel was efficient.

WHAT SHE DID, YOU CAN DO. Buy things for your kitchen that are broad and shallow. If your gas burner is four inches in diameter use pots and pans that are eight inches in diameter and, ten inches would be even better.

NO-- By EVA M'DONALD VALESH.

Editor and Lecturer.

A REALLY nice woman will not marry many times.

Frequent marriages suggest commercialism. We think of a woman who has made many marriages [illegible] do of a horse that [illegible] many masters. The [illegible] exists against [illegible] is known to have been [illegible] entertained, but a much deeper [illegible] toward the woman who has had many husbands. And as we think of the price [illegible] think of the [illegible] woman, and we wonder [illegible]

Men are cleverer than women [illegible] their ideas are written in the laws they have made [illegible] Those laws contemplate [illegible] beyond that number [illegible] dom look. That is [illegible] property. [illegible] children, so to speak, and scat her property.

Many marriages not only coarsen the woman but create what is for [illegible] children [illegible] sacred.

In my [illegible] often destroy [illegible] some circumstances [illegible] many fine women [illegible] I respect who [illegible] marriage [illegible] side of marriage.

These women of [illegible] tions, say [illegible] marriage is permanent not only while both live, but while either remains. They do not believe that death [illegible] can destroy the bond. "I belong to a memory," I have heard these sincere widows say and have inwardly applauded the beauty of the sentiment.

I particularly [illegible] to see a woman in a prominent position contract several marriages. Her name and personality are known, and for the young men and women who are familiar with her fame she sets an example that is not uplifting.

It is a curious comment on the so-called faithlessness of men that they do not marry as often as women do. I know a good many women who have married three, four or five times, but I recall few men who have married more than twice. Nat Goodwin and De Wolf Hopper? Well [illegible] they are of the stage, and we look to the stage for our entertainment, and not for our practice of the niceties [illegible] The smaller [illegible] have a [illegible] regard for marriage than have women.

YES-- By BARONESS BAZUS Formerly Mrs. Frank Leslie.

I DO not believe that any limit should be set on progressive matrimony.

There are two reasons that have their roots in the depths of human nature for remarriages. One is that if the first marriage is a happy state, there is a desire to repeat it. The other is that if the first marriage of marriages turn out badly, hope triumphs over experience and it is human to want to try again. Each is a good and sufficient reason.

[illegible] answers the question, "How many times should a woman marry?" For she may marry as often as she wishes to perpetuate a happy state or to forget an unhappy one.

The first marriage is usually for love. The man marries for love. So does the woman. The second time and thereafter he is likely to choose a woman who will be an ornament to his home, who will look well at the head of his table and in his carriage, who will set the stamp of her gracious personality upon his success in his combat with the world.

In HER second and subsequent marriages the woman [illegible] consider calm and congenial companionship [illegible] in marriage. She knows that man, imperfect [illegible] that he is, is a considerable shield against the [illegible] of life.

He is a most indispensable in travelling. He prevents [illegible] cheated by hotel keepers and [illegible] And many women [illegible] a great deal. They need an escort for this service. Call him a wrap carrier if you will. If he has as much money as she has, all the better, for the world will not say he married her for her money.

Some sensitive persons profess to be shocked by what they term the promiscuity of frequent marriages. This seems to me quite unnecessary. The preceding marriage, whether concluded by death or divorce, is over. It is finished, a turned page. In every other department of life we make contracts, but we have also the right to retire from them and build anew on the foundation of knowledge derived from old [illegible]

The unromantic truth is that many marriages cease, [illegible] love has gone [illegible] I do not believe that [illegible] five years of living under the same roof a man continues to love a woman [illegible] The [illegible] bloom off love.

I believe there is no limit to the number of marriages a [illegible] with propriety and happiness contract, if she has first freed herself from her old bonds. But there is one point she may well give thoughtful consideration. That is, that if she have sons she will not need to [illegible] My argument in favor of remarriage applies more particularly to the childless woman, but it is true in a [illegible] sense of any

Miss Lillian Russell as She Is To-day in All Her Unparalleled American Beauty and Charm.

MISS LILLIAN RUSSELL, who is the most beautiful American actress, and who, by some, is thought to be the most beautiful woman in America, is going to get married again. This makes her fourth venture into matrimony.

In 1876 she married Harry Braham, a musical director, and secured a divorce in 1884. In 1884 she married Edward Solomon, a composer, and divorced him ten years later. In 1894 she married John Chatterton, a professional singer known as Signor Perugini. She left him four months later and divorced him in 1898. Now Miss Russell is going to try matrimonial happiness again with Alexander P. Moore, a Pittsburg publisher and millionaire.

Miss Russell's conspicuous beauty and stage position make her views of progressive matrimony important. Here she answers the question raised by her fourth marriage, and two prominent women discuss whether it is respectable for a woman to contract an indefinite number of marriages.

I BELIEVE in re-marriages. If the adage "If at first you don't succeed try, try again" applies to every other condition in life, why not to marriage?

If we make [illegible] fessional matters [illegible] our first failure [illegible] second marriage [illegible] almost always happier than the first. So I [illegible] own and others, I say [illegible] I know [illegible] good women, as I know there must be good men. God would [illegible] such a one-sided world that only the women in it are good.

[illegible] women [illegible] taken when they think that women [illegible] vote [illegible] of men.

If some [illegible] have failed in their duty [illegible] should not judge all men by them [illegible] the large view of men and of human [illegible] moves a woman to marry again [illegible] It is the triumph of hope.

Marriage is the natural state and [illegible]

Let me add that no marriage is happy that is based upon the broken heart of another woman. I have never caused any woman's heart to ache, and I never will.

If a woman would wait until she is thirty [illegible] there would [illegible] a greater proportion would be successful. The early first [illegible] cannot learn that great lesson of marriage, not to expect too much. Extreme youth always expects too much—of friends, of lovers, of the whole world.

Polite[illegible] binds together the [illegible] is the hot water that dissolves them. When a man gets into the habit of excusing his [illegible] by saying "O [illegible] the domestic ship tacks around and heads right for [illegible]

What They Think of Re-Marriage in Other Lands

FREEDOM of the widow to remarry is in general an indication of a nation's position in the scale of civilization. The more barbarous and benighted nations forbid the remarriage of widows with various accompaniments of cruelty.

The Hindus forbid remarriage of a widow with the [illegible] dreadful penalties that their religion and customs can inflict. The poor Hindu girl is married as a child. [illegible] a widow she is forced to be a slave of her mother-in-law or of any woman who will shelter her. Girls are often widows at twelve. Formerly they were burned alive with their husbands' bodies, but this practise called "suttee" has been suppressed by the British Government.

Among many African races it is customary to execute all the wives on the death of their husbands. In the Barua country a dead chief is arranged in his grave sitting on the lap of his principal wife with all the other wives arranged around them. Then the widows are all buried alive.

[illegible] one-half civilized country where remarriage of widows is freely permitted, but here the men have [illegible] condition of effeminacy, leaving all work and initiative to the women. One woman has as many husbands as she pleases in Thibet, and adds to them whenever she [illegible]

In Russia [illegible] civilized of any European country, the remarriage of widows is severely frowned upon. The Czar requires any widow in the imperial family to retire to a convent. Widows are required by law to wait six months before marrying. Russian priests are permitted to marry, but neither party may remarry on the death of the other.

In Mongolia widows may not remarry, but must become slaves or servants in lamaseries.

In China a woman upon marriage becomes a member of her husband's family, and subject to the others of her parents-in-law under the system of ancestor-worship. As long as the latter remain alive she is expected to live with them, but after [illegible] may remarry. The Chinese husband may divorce his wife for talkativeness, but no cause of divorce is permitted to her.

Among the Australian aborigines a widow has her head cut open and covered with plaster of paris, is compelled to remain silent for two years and then is forced to marry her husband's brother.

Among our Western Indians a woman is expected to remain a widow four to seven years and may not remarry after forty.

MY SECRETS OF BEAUTY

No. 159—How to Rest—

By Mme. Lina Cavalieri, the Most Famous Living Beauty.

MME. CAVALIERI gives valuable advice to-day on the subject about which American women need to know more, rest. American women are known around the world for their energy. There is scarcely a lazy woman in this country.

But the other side of the flattering shield is that American women are excessively nervous, and that because of this nervousness, they tend to grow old early. These tendencies they must, of course, shun and Mme. Cavalieri to-day tells how this may be done.

"Lie, limp as a rag, as a cat does when it rests."

"Take liquid foods, as soup and hot milk, to permit the stomach to rest."

By Mme. Lina Cavalieri

WINTER is the most taxing time to be[illegible]. The cold makes a dr[illegible] upon its strength, dries th[illegible] in the skin, makes the skin hard and rough and etches lines in the face. Next to worry, Winter is the greatest of wrinkle makers. It tempts one to overeat, because our food in Winter, and some of which we need to resist the onslaughts of the cold, are heavier and richer and sweeter than in Summer. These are likely to reveal their influence upon the body by blotches in the skin. Besides Winter has many festivities. We try to keep up with the operas and theatres and dinners in large cities or the parties and club affairs in smaller towns, and before Spring comes we begin to be tired. The tired feeling of the early Spring is a natural result of [illegible] Winter. The coldest months make an over draft upon the constitution.

The Summer vacation is yet a long way off. It would be unwise to wait for that to recuperate. So [illegible] you [illegible] lines [illegible] written on your face [illegible] eradicated, stamped forever. [illegible] to consider any condition [illegible] hopeless I must admit that there is a stage of advancement when wrinkles may be made less deep, but cannot be wholly removed. It is well to plan now for the rest you undoubtedly need after the Winter's activities and [illegible] into operation at the first possible moment.

It is a [illegible] followed by many women of [illegible] treat during Lent [illegible] able women, women of high social position, and professional women to go to convents to rest during Lent [illegible] the results wrought by forty days of rising early, of early going to bed, of simple food and absolutely regular hours. Sleeping in the small clean, but cell-like, room, often with walls of stone, is one of the greatest factors in this rejuvenation. We would all be healthier, would look younger and prettier if we would tear down the [illegible], our windows [illegible] velvet or silk or tapestry portieres from our portals, even take down the pictures from our walls, replace the carpets by screens and approach as nearly as possible a dustless condition in our sleeping chambers. Even now I find many of my beautiful friends, when I am admitted to the intimacy of their bedrooms, lying in [illegible] beds amidst surroundings that suggest a nun's cell. And should Cavalieri live to be an old woman she will doubtless see all intelligent persons so providing for health during sleep. The bedrooms of the future will, I believe, be well ventilated cells.

But let me suggest [illegible] rest should be en[illegible]. Comparatively few of you [illegible] without [illegible] which are so [illegible] own circumstances [illegible]

It would [illegible] advantage of every [illegible] [illegible] hot air rises and passes out of the room [illegible] sash, and cold air [illegible] comes in at the lowest [illegible]

If you have not tried this plan of spending a day in bed begin now if possible. Partake lightly of food. Take liquid foods as soup and hot milk to permit the stomach to rest. Drink much cool water. And sleep all you can.

The time will be more profitably spent if you give your complexion special treatment at this time. This you can do restfully in the manner I will describe.

The skin, dried by contact with the outer air, needs food. Its food is oil. Have ready a face mask made of light flannel, cut in a square, and with holes for the nostrils. Saturate this flannel in a bowl of olive or cocoanut oil, and when it has been well soaked place it over the face. Keep this on until the oil has been absorbed by the skin. If the skin is hungry—that is, especially dry—the process will be a quick one. Usually it takes two hours. This may be done several times a day during the periods of rest. In a short time the face will look, as it is, greatly refreshed. It will lose its dry, withered look, and the lines of the face will be fainter.

The cat is a great physical culture teacher. A woman, especially a nervous woman, should study the rest habits of the house cat. Notice how she lies, limp as a rag, on a cushion or on the floor. She stretches at full length or in a cozy, loose ball while she [illegible]. Her [illegible] or [illegible] into a tight [illegible] to fear [illegible] the yellow dog in the alley, or the cruel boy next door who makes her a target for the stones he throws.

Don't be fearful during your rest [illegible] that all is well [illegible] will be. [illegible] and feel your tired feet resting, relaxing and settling peacefully into their natural place. Let your arms above your head and fancy that your hands hold heavy weights. Drop them heavily at your sides.

In the same way raise one foot at a time and let each drop heavily to the bed. This will loosen your tightened muscles.

To return to that teacher of physical culture the cat, imitate the way he uncurls all the hard, tight little knots into which he has gathered muscles and nerves while he was playing or mousing, or dodging his enemies. While he awakes, or when he is preparing for sleep, he stretches and stretches and stretches. And what a luxury that stretching is! Raise your arms above your head. Yawn and stretch and stretch and stretch, and what delicious ease and relaxation follow!

Watch the cat go to the other side of the fireplace, stretch again, and, gradually adapting his body to the new surroundings, spread himself out again for another nap. Do you likewise.

If you can do no more than get an extra hour's rest by going to bed an hour earlier, do that. Go to your room an hour earlier, even though you do not retire any earlier.

Rest as much as you can and rest alone. Every soul and body needs now and then to be alone. Claim this right for yourself in this making over time, this first and needed rest time of beauty's year.

Beauty Questions Answered.

J. B. S. N. writes: "Please be so kind and tell me through your beauty column how I can beautify my eyebrows and eyelashes, principally how I can keep them glossy and the eyebrows well arched."

We train a child in the way it should go, do we not? That is what we must do with eyebrows. An eyebrow brush is the best friend the eyebrows have, after a good constitution. If you are in good health and vigorous your eyebrows should be sufficiently thick. You can only by careful daily brushing keep them free from dust and well arched. Brush them in the high arch in which you wish them to grow and the hairs will gradually take that direction. Friction is a strong hair grower, and friction above the point where the eyebrows now grow, often causes a growth of hair at that point. Lanoline rubbed into the brows nightly aids the growth of hair.

This is a stimulant to eyebrow growth in which many have faith:

Red vaseline, 15 centigrams, 1/2 oz.
Boric acid, 1/2 oz.

Personally, I have never advocated clipping the eyelashes, because I considered it might do more harm than good. Those lovely [illegible] the eye, lashes, are so much needed that it would be a calamity to lose them. Yet I have known eyelashes to be advantageously clipped. I know a young woman who has beautifully long and thick eyelashes who has them clipped once a month. But she has it done in this discriminating way.

After laving the eyes in tepid water and gently drying them with a soft cloth, she sits with eyes closed in a strong light. The person who is to do the clipping carefully examines the lashes, one by one. If any hair appears bent or broken or longer than the rest the tip is removed by slight clipping. Cutting the eyelashes off straight around is not artistic work, nor is it wise.

B. C. asks: "Can you tell me some simple remedy for my lips, which are always deathly white, [illegible] otherwise I have a fine color. I do not think it comes from [illegible] in my system."

[illegible] A skilled doctor [illegible] glances at the lips when he [illegible] impression of the state [illegible]. Pale lips [illegible] an impoverished system. This is practically an infallible rule. The simplest remedy for those deathly [illegible] lips is to get a physician to [illegible].

E. [illegible] writes: "Please answer me in your valuable page. I need a [illegible]"

Give peroxide of hydrogen a thorough trial. Do not be discouraged until you have used it every other day for several months, for hairs grow slowly and disappear slowly, and see no results. I prefer it to any external remedy save electrolysis, because it is the safest.

Mix a tablespoonful of peroxide with a tablespoonful of tepid water. Bathe the face and arms with it. Let the application dry on the skin. In time, a longer time in some cases than others, this should first bleach the hairs so that they will show much less, and finally weaken them, causing them to die.

It tells all about Florida's most noted colony where for 17c a day you may own a farm worth $5,000 a year

Send today—now—for this great book that tells all about the great Florida land rush—how Charles H. Sieg has turned the attention of capital and labor to the wonderful possibilities of the Florida small farm.

It is the real truth about Florida in fact and story.

It tells in graphic style the earnings of an acre in his great colony, which is startling the whole country with the great rush of Northern farmers and city people to its small farms.

It is without doubt the greatest piece of land literature ever issued by any company, for it is chuck full of photographic proof of actual everyday facts—stories of success from colonists on the ground, backed with the proof from officials, merchants, bankers, fruit growers and vegetable raisers.

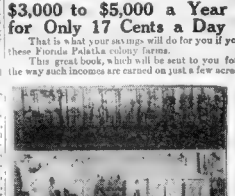
No matter where you are thinking of locating a home, you should, by all means, do yourself the justice of reading this great book.

CHARLES H. SIEG
The Pioneer Florida Small Farm Man.

$3,000 to $5,000 a Year for Only 17 Cents a Day

That is what your savings will do for you if you will become the owner of one of these Florida Palatka colony farms.

This great book, which will be sent to you for the coupon below, tells all about the way such incomes are earned on just a few acres.



The Evolution of a Ten Acre Colony Farm

This picture tells the story of success stronger than words. Think what it means! The first picture shows new land nine months ago—then the settler's tent—then the clearing of his lands—then his growing crops—and, finally, his beautiful bungalow, surrounded by growing crops and independence. You will see hundreds of like farms in this colony; you will learn the stories of their success from these people—the truth of Florida. And you will find all this in "Ten Acres and Freedom."

The price of these colony farms is $30.00 an acre. They carries with it a town lot free with each 10 acres in one of the new railroad towns now being established. The terms for a 10 or 20 acre tract are 50c per acre down and 50c an acre per month.

If you are not entirely satisfied with your land you may ask for and receive every cent you have paid upon your land. And you have four months in which to make your examination and inspection of the land. You may enter and take possession and plant your crops after a single payment of only 50c per acre down.

This is the greatest offer ever made by any company and this is the first and greatest of all Florida farm colonies. This book which you will receive free for the coupon is the most interesting and convincing matter which you have ever received.

You will like the manner in which this land is described, and the great country which surrounds it on every side. You will like the actual stories of success from men and women like yourself who have made their homes here. They tell in their own words, with actual photos of their farms and homes, just exactly how they succeeded—the most wonderful stories you ever read.

You are not going to a wilderness when you locate upon a Florida Palatka Colony farm—it is traversed by two great trunk line railroads—the Atlantic Coast Line and the Seaboard Air Line—while the Ocala & Northern intersects these two railroads, directly through the heart of the colony lands.

Here in the Florida Palatka Colony can be the finest of roads, the most delightful climate—an even temperature—73 degrees the yearly average; good country schools, daily papers, rural mail routes, local and long distance telephone, colony administration built once with a corps of agricultural experts at hand, and on the whole just as ideal conditions as the pleasure resort classes boast of, the lucky settlers can build and stay as long as you live. This is not a new and untried country—thousands of successful farmers are here on their colony farms now—all making a success.

This book "Ten Acres and Freedom" and its companion proof will convince you, like it has thousands of others, and will make you think instead of the future and how your little savings of today will make a success of you more than anything you have ever read.

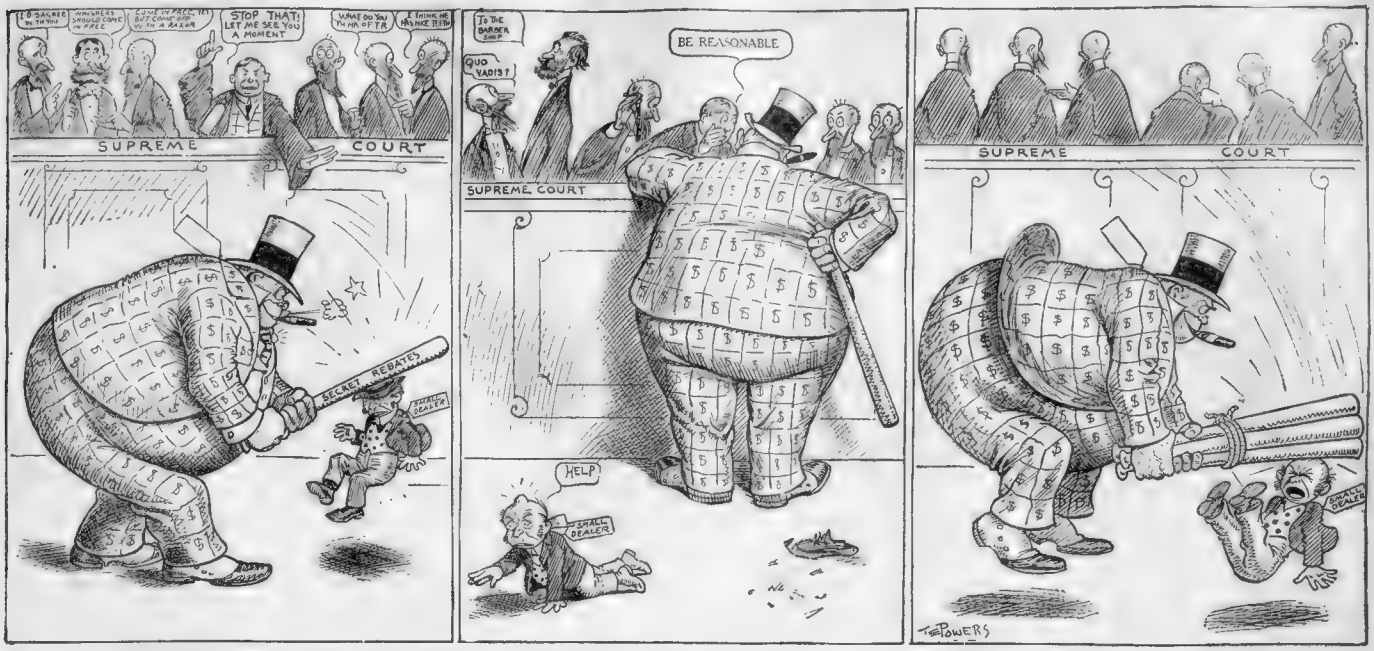
When Combination Becomes Monopoly What Shall Fix Prices?

By William Randolph Hearst, in the January Number of "The World To-day" Magazine



THE TRUST SITUATION.---Reproduced from the January Number of "The World To-day" Magazine

Monopoly in the Sole Interest of Monopoly or Government in the Interests of the Whole Community?

By WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST.

THE most difficult problem to approach in discussing the question of combination is the problem of the regulation of prices under monopoly.

It is obvious that combination is growing and extending in the direction of monopoly in almost every large line of business.

But even where monopolies are not created by coercive measures, or for speculative purposes, they gradually tend to form, because of the convincing and compelling economic advantages of combination and because of the necessity for complete co-operative organization to handle in the most systematic and effective manner the marvellous production of modern business.

There are stringent laws against trust coercion and oppression, and these laws should be enforced to the limit of their criminal penalties.

There should also be stringent Federal incorporation laws to prevent trust over-capitalization and wildcat speculation, and these laws should be strictly applied and enforced.

But after the enforcement of the criminal clauses of the Sherman act has prevented the formation of monopolies by coercion, and after an effective Federal incorporation act has prevented the formation of trusts for speculative and stock-jobbing purposes, WHAT IS GOING TO BE DONE WITH THE MONOPOLIES THAT FORM NATURALLY THROUGH GENERAL AND RIGHTFUL RECOGNITION OF THE ADVANTAGES OF COMBINATION?

A monopoly that is formed naturally and legitimately is just as much a monopoly as one that is formed unnaturally and improperly.

The one, if it is a monopoly, has just as much power to control the market and extort high prices from the consuming public as the other.

The monopoly that is formed by genius, by persistent effort, by energy and enterprise is just as much a monopoly as the one that is formed by force and fraud.

IT MAY NOT BE AS HATEFUL, BUT IT IS JUST AS POWERFUL.

IT MAY NOT HAVE BEEN AS DESTRUCTIVE IN ITS FORMATION, BUT IT IS JUST AS DANGEROUS IN ITS OPERATION.

IT MAY NOT HAVE BEEN AS OPPRESSIVE TO ITS OPPONENTS AND COMPETITORS, BUT IT IS LIKELY TO BE JUST AS EXTORTIONATE IN ITS DEALINGS WITH THE CONSUMING PUBLIC.

IF IT IS A MONOPOLY, NO MATTER HOW FORMED, IT POSSESSES THE POWER OF MONOPOLY, AND, POSSESSING THE POWER OF MONOPOLY, AND HAVING THE ADVANTAGE OF AN EXCLUSIVE MARKET, IT CAN PUT THE PRICES OF ITS PRODUCTS UNREASONABLY LOW TO DISCOURAGE COMPETITION, OR IT CAN PUT THEM UNREASONABLY HIGH TO EXTORT UNJUST PROFITS FROM THE PUBLIC.

Obviously, it can do both of these things, and unregulated, unrestrained, uncontrolled, it obviously will do both of these things.

BOTH ARE UNJUST.

BOTH ARE INJURIOUS.

BOTH ARE AGAINST PUBLIC POLICY.

BOTH MUST BE CONSIDERED AND DEALT WITH.

HOW ARE THEY GOING TO BE DEALT WITH?

Of course, no one would for a moment consider government regulation of prices or profits if there were no necessity for considering such governmental action.

Of course, no one would advocate that government should interfere in business except where there is absolute necessity for government to interfere to protect the public.

BUT WHERE THERE IS ABSOLUTE MONOPOLY, THERE IS SUCH ABSOLUTE NECESSITY.

What else is possible? What else can be done?

Competition was wont formerly to regulate prices, although in an irregular and haphazard way, in a way that satisfied us, although unsatisfactory because we then knew of no superior system.

Competition and the unrestricted law of supply and demand regulated prices, or rather controlled prices.

Prices, as a matter of fact, were not regulated.

They fluctuated, and they fluctuated from very low prices, ruinous to the producer when the product was plentiful, to very high prices, burdensome to the consumer when the product was scarce.

NATURAL COMPETITION REGULATES PRICES VERY MUCH AS NATURAL RAIN SUPPLY WATERS CROPS.

SOMETIMES, CROPS ARE DROWNED OUT BECAUSE OF TOO MUCH WATER, AND SOMETIMES THEY ARE DRIED OUT BECAUSE OF TOO LITTLE WATER.

But now competition no longer regulates at all. The law of supply and demand does not control monopoly.

On the contrary, monopoly controls the supply, modifies the demand, and regulates the price to suit its own requirements.

Combination regulates prices as irrigation waters crops.

The quantity of water is limited to conditions and requirements, and the only question is how and by whom the quantity of water shall be controlled for the best interests of the whole community.

Prices are regular enough now. They do not fluctuate. But being regulated by monopoly, they are regulated in the interest of monopoly.

PRICES ARE REGULATED AT THE HIGHEST POINT THAT THE "TRAFFIC WILL BEAR," AND VARY ONLY WHEN THE TRAFFIC WILL BEAR MORE.

This regular or steady regulation of prices, even by monopoly, has some actual advantages despite its obvious disadvantages.

It has advantages to the producer, although not to the consumer.

It has advantages in the creation of wealth, although not in the distribution of wealth.

THE CONSUMING PUBLIC, through THE NATURAL AND INEVITABLE SELFISHNESS OF THE PROMOTERS OF COMBINATION, IS DEBARRED FROM SHARING IN THE ADVANTAGES OF COMBINATION.

We have cheaper production, but not cheaper prices, and there is nothing to compel cheaper prices; not competition, for it no longer operates; not the law of supply and demand, that law has been repealed; not altruism, for in business altruism does not exist; not public opinion, for the motto of monopoly is "the public be damned."

THEN WHAT?

Let us have the courage to face the problem honestly and to reach the legitimate conclusion.

There are various methods of evading the subject, one of which the Supreme Court has adopted. But all evasion is ineffective. Trickery is but a temporary subterfuge.

When a problem is acute and actual, the solution must be genuine and final.

If the evils of monopoly are to be eliminated, there are only two effective ways:

ONE WAY IS TO DESTROY THE EVIL AND WITH IT THE MONOPOLY WHICH CREATES THAT EVIL.

THE OTHER WAY IS TO SEPARATE THE EVIL FROM THE MONOPOLY AND DESTROY ONLY THE EVIL.

One way is to prevent combination, and the other way is to permit combination, but prevent extortion.

One way is to compel business to compete against its will and contrary to its advantage, and the other way is to allow business to combine and to obtain the full advantage of combination, while compelling it to share that advantage with the public.

When considering the one alternative of destroying combination, we must weigh carefully the two most vital reasons for not destroying it or attempting to destroy it.

One of these is the convincing reason against substituting an inferior method of production for a superior one, against compelling a wasteful and cumbersome method to be employed in place of an efficient and economical one.

The other reason is the impossibility of doing anything so contrary to nature and to natural development, so opposed to universal advantage and advancement.

HOW CAN WE BENEFIT BY REPLACING ORGANIZATION WITH DISORGANIZATION, SYSTEM WITH DISORDER, HARMONIOUS CO-OPERATION WITH CONFLICTING INDIVIDUAL EFFORT?

Combination is the expression of greater experience, better knowledge, and higher intelligence, the result of education, the effect of gradual appreciation of certain fundamental principles and the transmission of those principles into practical operation.

Combination means economy. Combination means efficiency. Combination means system and simplicity, the elimination of unnecessary cogs in the business machinery.

Combination means increased production and decreased effort. Combination means stability, permanence, confidence, certainty, and every able business man knows it.

AS A CONSEQUENCE, THE BIG BUSINESS OF THE COUNTRY WILL POSITIVELY BE CONDUCTED IN COMBINATION, EITHER OPEN OR SECRET.

IF GOVERNMENT RECOGNIZES AND ALLOWS COMBINATION, IT WILL MAKE COMBINATION PUBLIC.

IF COMBINATION IS SECRET, IT CANNOT BE REGULATED OR CONTROLLED.

IF COMBINATION IS PUBLIC, IT CAN BE REGULATED AND CONTROLLED IN THE INTEREST OF THE PUBLIC.

THE INEVITABLE, UNAVOIDABLE, INESCAPABLE CONCLUSION IS THAT COMBINATION SHOULD BE PERMITTED, SHOULD BE COMPELLED TO BE PUBLIC, AND SHOULD BE REGULATED IN THE INTEREST OF THE PUBLIC.

Then how is it to be regulated, and what is to regulate it?

Not combination itself, because combination will not regulate itself unselfishly; not the public, as a body, for the public has not the knowledge or organization to do it, but the government, the common representative of both the consuming public and the business interests.

Whenever business demands of government the right to combine, then business must concede to the government the power to impose conditions that will compel combination to operate for the public good.

If the combination constitutes a merger or monopoly extensive enough and powerful enough to fix prices, then the government must require that the prices fixed shall not be unreasonable or to the detriment of the public.

Thus the advantages of combination will be secured, not only for the producer, but for the consumer.

THUS CHEAPER PRODUCTION WILL MEAN CHEAPER PRICES; THUS THE ADVANTAGES OF COMBINATION WILL BECOME GENERAL, FOR THE PUBLIC WILL RECEIVE ITS FAIR SHARE OF THEM; THUS COMBINATION ITSELF WILL BECOME POPULAR, FOR IT WILL MEAN NOT A BURDEN UPON THE PUBLIC, BUT A BENEFIT TO THE PUBLIC.

I have discussed in this article the regulation of prices rather than the limitation of profits, because the two are but different forms of the same proposition.

The limitation of profits is as advanced a step as the regulation of prices, but not as practical a process.

The regulation of prices in no way interferes with or discourages economy or efficiency of operation, compactness of organization, or any of those business advantages to promote which combination exists and is to be allowed to exist.

On the other hand, limitation of profits removes one of the main incentives to economy and efficiency in the perfected system possible under combination and necessary for cheap production.

If business (no matter how economically and efficiently it may be conducted) is limited in its profits, then, inevitably, less attention will be paid to the economy and efficiency that make for cheaper production and cheaper prices.

But if business be merely restrained from charging an exorbitant price for its products and allowed to appropriate as profits all that can be created within that price by economy and efficiency, then economy and efficiency will be maintained at the highest degree of perfection and the full advantage of combination will be developed and secured.

The regulation of prices, then, secures for business a larger opportunity and for the public a greater and more definite benefit.

Inasmuch as the regulation of prices is merely an enlargement of powers already possessed by the government, it would be well in providing for the regulation of prices to adhere as closely as possible to the means and machinery already employed by the government.

The regulation of prices is merely an extension of the idea involved in the regulation of rates.

The regulation of the charges of monopolies created by governmental grants and franchises is merely extended to include the regulation of the charges of other monopolies equally powerful and equally important to the public welfare.

A sufficient enlargement of the number and a sufficient extension of the powers of that commission would form a body able and fitted to deal with the problem of more general rate or price regulation.

When a member of Congress, I introduced bills giving the Inter-state Commerce Commission the power to fix railroad rates, creating the Inter-state Commerce Court, and proposing a Federal Incorporation act.

An elaboration of the machinery necessary to perform these recognized functions of government would be sufficient to enable the government to perform without derangement or difficulty the enlarged functions involved in the control of combination and the regulation of prices.

"WHAT'S this here Halley's Kummet which I am all the time reading about it in the papers?" said Harris Gelb to his partner, Kobos Rashkind, as they sat in their show room late one Saturday afternoon.

"Might it is Moe Haller from Port Sullivan, maybe? Ain't it?"

"Couldn't be the same feller at all. Haller busted up way before the Spanish War already."

"What are you talking nonsense?" Rashkind protested. "Haller is doing business right now in Port Sullivan as the 'Moneyworth Cloak Company.' That only goes to show what an up-to-date feller you are, Gelb. Port Sullivan is supposed to be on your route, Gelb, and you don't even know what concerns does business there at all."

"Is that so?" Gelb retorted. "Well, maybe I do and maybe I don't, but that ain't here nor there. I don't bother myself I should waste a couple of days' time in every backwoods town, which you got to stop off at a wilderness and wait three hours for a train, which is anyhow two hours' late, y'understand. Then when you get there one storekeeper is in New York and the other's got smallpox or something and you couldn't see him at all, and so you could kiss yourself good-bye with ten dollars expenses and a whole day's time. Port Sullivan, that's a medeena, Rashkind. I'd as lief go to Africa, beheve me."

"Well, if I was the outside man, Gelb, and it would be necessary to go to Africa to sell goods, I would go even to Russland, too. If a feller wants to sell goods, Gelb, he couldn't take things so particular. Look at Fishbein & Blintz. Them boys is willing they should go to a little trouble to get trade. Only last season I seen Moe Haller coming out from their place, and I bet yer he done a big business with 'em, too."

"That's all right. A feller like Blintz could eat anything. I assure you, Rashkind, the kind of food which they hand it out in them hotels like Port Sullivan's got, would give the indigestion to an ostricher already."

"Maybe Blintz is an ostricher and maybe he ain't, Gelb," Rashkind said, "but if you could sell the goods which that feller Blintz sells, Gelb, I am willing you should be an ostricher, too."

"And if you would got the idees which Fishbein got in turning out snappy garments, Rashkind," Gelb retorted bitterly, "I wouldn't got to travel by dollar and a half a day, American plan hotels. Take that 'Ellen Terry' suit which that feller originated, and there's a style which a buyer only got to look at once, y'understand, and right away Blintz books a big order."

"Sure, I know," Rashkind commented. "Only this morning we are finishing up a number which I am going to call it the 'Lillian Russell' suit and——"

At this juncture Gittleberg, the foreman, appeared with the very suit in his arms and handed it to Rashkind.

"Look't Gelb," Rashkind said, "ain't that a fine style?"

"Why, Rashkind," Gelb exclaimed, "that's the selfsame style as the 'Ellen Terry.'"

"Is it?" Rashkind cried. "Well, that's where you make a big mistake. That style ain't nothing like the 'Ellen Terry.' Here is three buttons and the 'Ellen Terry' got only two. The 'Ellen Terry' got here a piece silk and we got here a piece satin."

"Well, and what else is the difference?"

"What else do you want?" Gelb rejoined. "This suit is a distinctly difference style and I could prove it. In the first place it cost them people eight dollars to make it nu, and us it only cost seven, twenty-five."

Gelb nodded.

"And with the rent what we pay, and the rent what they pay, we could better afford as them people to cut down the profit, ain't it?" Rashkind continued.

Gelb nodded again.

"And so, Gelb," Rashkind concluded, "there ain't no reason in the world why we shouldn't do it a big trade with Fishbein & Blintz's customers this season. Always supposing, Gelb, you would forget about that Africa business, and go to Port Sullivan and any other jay-town and cop out their customers. You got to remember, Gelb, that when you keep the expenses down there's just as much profit in five five-hundred dollar orders as in one twenty-five hundred dollar order."

"There's a durnsite worse place as New York, m'friend, when it comes right down to it."

II.

Port Sullivan is situated near one of the Great Lakes, on the banks of a muddy stream, which is navigable only in February, when the "Rivers and Harbors Bill" is under discussion by Congress. After the casual traveller alights at the Port Sullivan station and surveys the architecture of the adjacent buildings he is apt to murmur to himself:

O Death, where is thy sting?
O Grave, where is thy victory?

Having rid his mind of the quotation, he will immediately plunge into the side door of the Huron House, as Harris Gelb did, on his return journey to New York after his trip West, and find solace in the "wine of the country," which is ten cents for up to three fingers.

"Do you want for to—now—register?" the bartender asked in his quality of hotel clerk.

"Gott soll huten," Harris cried. "Which of them stores does Moses Haller run?"

"The third store over yonder," the bartender-clerk replied, "but he ain't there now, he's down to New York City."

"What!" Harris exclaimed. He sank down in the nearest chair and wiped his face with a travel-stained handkerchief.

"Oi Gervaldt!" he murmured. "Ain't that terrible?"

"Oh, I don't know," the bartender commented, "if a stranger behaves himself in New York and tends to his own business, he's as safe there as he is anywhere. There's a durnsite worse place as New York, m'friend, when it comes right down to it."

Harris nodded in the name of peace.

"Sure, I know," he said, "but when is Haller going to be back?"

"Now, that's something I couldn't tell you," the bartender replied, "but you'll find Mrs. Haller over to the store and she'll know."

Harris seized his telescope case and plunged through the chocolate-colored mud of Port Sullivan's main street toward the "Moneyworth Store," which almost faced the depot.

"Good morning, ma'am," he said to Mrs. Haller. "Mr. Haller ain't in. No?"

"No, he ain't," Mrs. Haller answered.

"This is my card," he continued, handing Mrs. Haller one the firm's cards, "and my name is Mister Gelb."

"Gelb? Gelb!" Mrs. Haller repeated. "Ain't you some mishbocha to Marcus Gelb which used to be in the customer peddler business in Boston?"

Harris had never heard of this personage, but the suggested relationship seemed to present engaging possibilities, so he nodded vigorously.

"Sure," he said, "me and Markie is first cousins yet."

For one brief moment Mrs. Haller glared savagely at Harris and then she tore the card into a dozen pieces.

"How any relation of a schwindler like Marcus Gelb could get the nerve to show his face in this store, I don't know," she said. "Maybe you think it is a smart thing that Marcus Gelb could get engaged to my sister, Blooma, and then go off and get married by a daughter of old man Kromberger, when my poor sister is got her trousso all g'fixt and all. Maybe you got an idee people quickly forgets such things, so you come in here to sell goods yet. Chutzpa!"

Harris grew pale.

"But, Mrs. Heller," he began.

"You shouldn't say narthing," Mrs. Haller commanded. "My husband comes back this evening, and if you got to insult me, do it when he is here."

"But, my dear Madame," Harris began again.

"Never mind," Mrs. Haller cried. "Such people would get their reward. With all of old man Kromberger's money it would never do Marcus Gelb no good. You, too—you might think because Marcus Gelb is got a little money you should be proud you belong to his mishbocha. Plenty crooks got money."

"But, listen here," Harris started off once more.

"All right, Mrs. Gelb," Mrs. Haller concluded, "I hear enough from you. You could be sure I would tell my husband just so soon as he comes back to-night, how you came in mein store and shout at me. You're a gentleman, Mr. Gelb, just so much like your cousins."

Harris licked his dry lips in an effort to formulate an explanation, but Mrs. Haller's forbidding glance made him seize his sample case instead and bolt out of the store. He returned at once to the office-barroom of the Huron House.

"Have you got a room with running water?" he asked the hyphenated clerk.

"Only when it rains," the latter replied, "and that's on the top floor. I can give you a nice front room for a dollar and a half a day, American plan."

Harris shrugged despairingly.

"All right," said.

"Where's your trunks, Mister?" he asked.

"I left 'em at Cleveland," Harris replied.

A half-chewed cigar reposed in the corner of the clerk's mouth and it made a return trip across his lips with the aid of his teeth before he spoke.

"You're from New York, ain't you?" he said.

"You got it right," Harris answered.

"Well, I guess you'd better pay in advance," said the clerk.

Harris forked up a dollar and a half.

"I thought you says there was worse places as New York," he commented.

"So there is," the clerk replied as he took a leather-tabbed key from the rack behind the bar. "So there is, m'friend, and this is one of 'em."

III.

When the evening train stopped at the Port Sullivan depot and Moses Haller alighted, Harris Gelb ran forward to greet him.

"How do you do, Mister Haller!" he cried

The traveller held a gripsack in either hand, but he deposited his impedimenta on the station platform and held out his hand perfunctorily. After Harris had shaken it with a degree of warmth that brought the tears to Haller's eyes, he seized Haller's grips.

"Allow me, Mister Haller," he said. "I will walk across to the store with you."

"Much obliged," Haller replied, "but I don't know as I got the pleasure to know you."

"Me, I am Harris Gelb, of Gelb & Rashkind, New York."

"A feller could easy break his neck here," he said "Excuse me, Mr. Gelb, for interrupting you. I'm pleased to meetcher."

"Yes, Mr. Haller," Gelb continued, "and I ain't no relation to Marcus Gelb in Boston. I never heard tell of the feller until Mrs. Haller mentioned his name."

"Well, I never said you was," Haller continued, and they negotiated the swampy crossing to the "Moneyworth Store."

"Sure, I know," Harris continued, "but I said I was. I said so to Mrs. Haller this morning and she wanted to throw me out of the store yet. I thought she meant Max Gelb, not Marcus Gelb, which Max Gelb is a first cousin of mine, but Marcus Gelb ain't, y'understand. That's a difference family entirely."

"I'm glad to hear it," Haller replied.

"So if you would be so good and explain to Mrs. Haller what I told it you," Harris said, "and I'll be over to see you after supper."

"Sure, I will," Moses Haller declared, as they reached the store door. "Thanks, much obliged, for helping me with the grips, Mr. Gelb. Will you bring your samples with you, or should I step across the Huron House to see 'em?"

"I'll bring 'em over, Mister Haller," Gelb replied. "I only got a few suits with me, just our leaders, y'understand, but they're certainly peaches, Mister Haller, believe me."

"That's all right, I take your word for it." Haller replied, "but they're certainly got to be peaches to beat some of the suits which I bought in New York."

"I don't know about that, Mister Haller," Harris commented, "Fishbein & Blintz ain't got nothing on us when it comes down to making suits."

"Well, how about that 'Ellen Terry' style?" Haller asked.

But the answer was postponed until after supper, for at this juncture Mrs. Haller opened the store door.

"Moe!" she cried in a rich penetrating baritone, "what's the matter you don't come inside? Ain't you got a wife after you've been three weeks away in New York? Moost you got to waste your time with loafers, yet?"

Moe and Harris exchanged sympathetic glances, and, as the loud smack of the marital welcoming kiss resounded through the street, Harris returned mournfully to the hotel. Supper was ready when he entered and he sat down to a meal which violated every dietary law of the Mosaic, or any other hygienic code. He ate a few slices of soggy bread, buttered with a fatty substance too thick for axle grease and too thin for lubricating oil, and he washed down the whole with a cup of what the solitary waitress in a burst of imaginative enthusiasm called coffee. Nor did his post-prandial cigar afford him any comfort. Its name had been branded too deeply on the wrapper, so that his cheeks ached in a vain effort to make it draw. At length he desisted from the attempt and, armed with his telescope case, he sought again the "Moneyworth Store." He found Moses Haller unpacking a trunk containing samples of the suits he had bought in New York.

"Good evening, Mr. Haller," Harris cried, "and Mrs. Haller."

Mrs. Haller drew herself up haughtily.

"I told her you was no relation to Marcus Gelb," Haller explained, "but she don't believe it."

"Who said I don't believe it?" Mrs. Haller protested. "I ain't said so. For mein part it would be all the same to me if he was a relation or if he wasn't a relation. A feller might be no relation to Marcus Gelb and he could be a liar, anyhow."

With this parting shot she disappeared into the rear of the store, while Moe Haller resumed his unpacking.

"Excuse me a minute, Mr. Gelb," he said. "Take a seat in the office, I'll be through here in just one minute. I want first to unpack the samples of the suits which I bought, just to see where I stand."

Harris nodded and obeyed, while Moe took from the trunk about a dozen suits. With a glance in the direction of the office, he removed the shipping tags, and five minutes later he summoned Harris Gelb from the columns of a month-old metropolitan paper.

"Now, Mr. Gelb, I am ready to see your samples."

he said, for Harris had already unstrapped his telescope case, and disposed his samples for ready reference.

"In the first place, Mr. Haller," he began, "I want to show you a style which we call it the 'Lillian Russell.'"

He drew out the suit in question and spread it to view.

"Why," Moe Haller cried, "that's the same like a style which I got it here."

He ran back to the trunk and pulled forth a suit that appeared to be a duplicate of the style displayed by Harris Gelb.

"Why, them two garments is the selfsame, one like the other," Haller exclaimed.

"Are they?" Harris said. "Who says they are? There's a big difference in them garments. Here, for instance, is a piece from satin and there is a piece from silk. Also here is three buttons and there is two buttons, and I bet yer also there's a big difference in the price."

"In the price there may be a difference, but the way them two garments is made up, Mr. Gelb, you would think they came out of the same shop."

He seized Mr. Haller's sample garment and examined it carefully.

"Now, you take it here, for instance," he said, indicating a slight stain on the cloth, "that is something which you could never find it in our garments."

"No?" Mr. Haller commented.

"No, siree, sir," Harris declared. "That comes from an operator eating his lunch over the machine. And then again, Mr Haller, the whole garment is made up sloppy, something which you wouldn't see in this garment which I got it here."

"Maybe you are right, Mr. Gelb," Haller replied. "But anyhow I bet yer I didn't pay no such price for this suit as you ask for yours. Come—give a guess. How much did I pay for this?"

"Me, I ain't such a good guesser," Harris replied, "but I would say, vielleicht, thirteen-fifty."

He and Rashkind had set a price of not less than eleven dollars on their imitation of the "Ellen Terry" style, which figure was based upon Fishbein & Blintz's quotation of thirteen-fifty, made in answer to a decoy letter sent them by Rashkind's brother-in-law.

Harris's face fell, but he preserved his composure nevertheless.

"Is that so?" he said. "Well, I made allowances for them fellers Fishbein & Blintz, Mr. Gelb, but I see I was a bit too strong. They soaked you anyhow, Mr. Haller, because we, ourselves, sell this suit for ten-fifty."

"What!" Haller cried. He grew red in the face and supplemented his exclamation with a loud burst of profanity that made Mrs. Haller rap sharply on the glass door in the rear of the store.

"I don't blame you, you should swear a little, Mr. Haller," Gelb went on. "Me, I would swear a little, too. I assure you, them fellers ain't got no mercy on their customers at all."

Haller nodded. He appeared to be unable to trust himself to words.

"Let me see them other samples you got," he said at last.

One by one Gelb produced the five other suits he had brought with him in the telescope case and Haller examined them carefully.

"That's our style thirty-one hundred," Harris said, as he showed another suit.

"Why, that's like another style which I bought it from them fellers," Haller said, scowling darkly. "I am to pay them fellers ten-fifty for it."

"Ten-fifty!" Harris exclaimed. He broke into a slight perspiration, for this was precisely the sum set upon his own samples. For one moment he considered the advisability of cutting his price and then he made the plunge.

"Ten fifty," he cried again. "Well, what d'ye think of that. We, ourselves, ask nine-seventy-five."

"Suckers!" Haller cried. "Cut-throats!"

He loosened his collar at the neck and gesticulated toward the remainder of Gelb's samples.

"Go ahead and show me them other ones," he croaked.

For half an hour longer Harris discussed his samples, but in each case he was obliged to make a cut in order to meet his competitor's price. When he finally repacked his case, he had booked an order amounting to a little more than five hundred dollars—$532.50, to be exact.

"I'll write them suckers to-night, Haller cried, as he ushered Harris out, "and cancel the order which I gave 'em. Mind you I bought them goods only day before yesterday."

"It's a lucky thing I came in here when I did," Harris said, "otherwise you would be stuck for fair." He turned as he reached the door. "Well, good-bye, Mr. Haller," he said, extending his hand, "and good luck to you."

Haller shook his hand limply and banged the door behind him. "That's a fine crank for you," Harris murmured to himself as he plunged into the morass of Main street. "Treats me like a dawg because them suckers sticks him yet."

IV.

From Fort Sullivan Harris proceeded early the following morning to Binghamton, where he gathered up his sample trunks and boarded the train for New York. It was nearly 6 o'clock when he entered his place of business, and Kobos Rashkind was just about to leave for the day.

"Well, Gelb," Rachkind cried, "did you get back?"

"A question!" Harris exclaimed. "I'm here, ain't I?"

"Sure," Rashkind admitted. "Well, how was things on the road, Gelb?"

"So, so," Harris replied. "You ain't done much in the store, what?"

"Ain't I?" Rashkind retorted. "Who says I ain't? I done a damsite more in the store as some people does on the road. I got a couple of orders from people which you wouldn't believe it all."

"Is that so?" Harris said. "Well, who are them people anyhow?"

"In the first place," Rashkind went on, "I sold a big bill to old man Kromberger, which you could say the feller was a millionaire."

"Yo!" Harris exclaimed satirically. "A millionaire! One of them marked-down millionaires, Rashkind. 90 per cent for cash, believe me."

Harris waved his hand — recating.

"Nu?" he said. "Who else?"

"Some one you wouldn't never dream would come in here at all and I'll tell you how it happened," Rashkind went on. "Yesterday was the day before, and I was sitting in Wasserbauer's, when who should come in but Fishbein & Blintz with a customer which they got it with 'em. So soon as Fishbein sees me, he comes running up to me and calls me names like I was a dawg. 'Sucker' is the least what he says and also he wants to make for me a couple blue eyes. 'A robber which duplicates my styles and sells 'em below what they cost me yet,' he says. 'I wouldn't have no mercy on at all,' he says, and goes on talking a lot more like that. Blintz tries to shut him up, but Fishbein goes pretty near crazy and all the time the customer is listening like his ears is going to drop off. Well, Gelb, I ain't been back in the store half an hour when in comes Fishbein & Blintz's customer and wants to see them styles which I duplicated from Fishbein & Blintz. Well, I showed him our 'Lillian Russell' and our style thirty-one hundred, and the first thing you know the feller give me an order for over six hundred dollars. Only one thing the feller wants. He wants me I should take off the satin rever and make it from silk a rever, Schon gut. I fixed the sample where he was waiting yet and he took it away with him. He wanted it just like that there 'Ellen Terry' style, buttons and all."

"And what did you say the feller's name was?" he asked.

"Moses Haller, from Port Sullivan," Rashkind answered. "What's the matter, Gelb? Don't you feel good?"

Harris fingered the five hundred dollar order in his breast pocket.

"Nothing's the matter, Rashkind," he croaked. "I'm a little sick to my stummick, that's all."

Rashkind rose to his feet.

"Well, Gelb," he said, "I would be late for dinner, so I guess I will go ahead. Anything you got to tell me before I go?"

Harris swallowed hard, but the words of confession would not come.

"It'll keep till to-morrow morning," he said, and after Rashkind had left, he immediately sought the order book. There could be no mistake about it. Moses Haller's six hundred and twenty-five dollar order, which had been given to Rashkind, was the duplicate of the five hundred and twelve dollar order which Gelb had booked in Port Sullivan.

The following day Gelb arrived at the office early and made a grab for the little pile of morning mail. The top letter was from Port Sullivan and it read as follows:

Gents:

Please and be so good to cancel my order which I give it to your Mr. Rashkind in your store and ship instead the order which I give Mr. Ge b in my store. Goods must be strictly up to sample, otherwise will return sure.

Yours truly,

THE MONEYWORTH STORE.

Moses Haller, Proprietor.

Harris held the letter in his hand when his partner came in and he thrust it, envelope and all, into his breast pocket.

Rashkind had taken off his coat.

"Well, Gelb," Rashkind said, "how d'ye feel this morning?"

"Not so good," Harris replied, and then he ventured on a conversational diversion. "That was a pretty good order we got from old man Kromberger."

"Sure," Rashkind commented. The old feller was telling me his son-in-law is also Gelb—Marcus Gelb, of Boston."

Harris nodded.

"Is he a relation from yours?" Rashkind asked.

Harris waggled his head solemnly.

"No, he ain't," he said. "I wisht he was. Things might have turned out differently."

And he handed over Haller's letter to his partner.

NEW YORK is run on one principle: Never have any.

More people die in New York every day for the want of something better to do than any other place on earth.

The only difference between the average man and a Broadwayite is that the ordinary man is made of plain dust, while the Broadwayite is, of a necessity, made of gold dust.

It is not safe to cross Broadway at any other time but four o'clock in the morning.

This is why so many people wait and cross Broadway along about that time.

One may travel up and down Broadway for hours without seeing a lady, for the women.

The strangest thing about him is that he doesn't consider it strange that he should live in Brooklyn.

Ask a Brooklynite where he wants to be buried when he dies, and he'll tell you that he doesn't want to be buried at all; he wants to be dug up!

There are several languages in general use: Harlemesque, Bronxomite, Broadwayese, and a patois consisting of a mixture of Sixth avenue, Fourteenth street and East River.

ROMANCE OF LORD LEFTOVER

A Society Novel of New York Life

By William F. Kirk

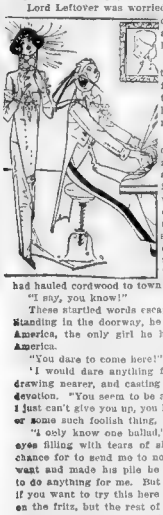
Copyright, 1912, by American-Journal-Examiner. Great Britain Rights Reserved.

NEWPORT was a blaze of light when Lord Leftover swung gracefully into the main street, in a hired automobile.

It was not the regular season. The regulars had departed long weeks before for the city, and only a few of the new inhabitants were left on the scene

Here and there a Newport villager shoveled snow from his walk; here and there a butcher delivered a round steak, taking infinite care of his package, for he knew that the folks who buy round steaks pay for them.

Lord Leftover was worried. His patrician brow was sicklied o'er with the pale cast of thought—an experience that was comparatively new to our hero.



He had been weeks and weeks in the new country, where he had come from beyond the seas to seek a fortune, and he seemed no nearer to his goal than a street cleaner is near to Mars.

Phyllis Baker reclined gracefully on her divan. A slight Winter zephyr came into the room and disarranged a lock of her truant hair. She shuddered all of a sudden—a vague shudder, an uncertain shudder. Her delicate shoulders sank more deeply into the fur overcoat she was wearing. It was her father's coat, the same old serviceable coat that he had worn in the old days back in the Northwest, when he had hauled cordwood to town to buy groceries for his little flock.

"I say, you know!"

These startled words escaped from the lips of Lord Leftover. Standing in the doorway, he gazed at the only girl he loved in America, the only girl he had ever had a chance to love in America.

"You dare to come here!" she exclaimed

'I would dare anything for you, dear," said Lord Leftover, drawing nearer, and casting upon Phyllis a look of the utmost devotion. "You seem to be a jolly good little sort, and all that I just can't give you up, you know. Let us sing a bit of a ballad or some such foolish thing, you know."

"I only know one ballad," said Phyllis Baker, her big violet eyes filling with tears of shame. "The old gent never had a chance for to send me to no boarding school, and after he had want and made his pile he seen that it was too late for him to do anything for me. But I am ready for to let you sing, sir, if you want to try this here piano. Three of the keys has gone on the fritz, but the rest of them stands up pretty good, and I was thinking maybe you might be able to dig some music out of them. Go to it, Mister Leftover, and I will promise you that I will applaud just as loud as if you had did something really good."

"But where are all the folks?" asked Lord Leftover. "I have here several folk songs and all of that jolly sort of thing, you know, and I was thinking that a good audience might make all the difference in the world."

Phyllis Baker regarded Lord Leftover tenderly. Young and unsophisticated though she was, she was of fine stock, and when she made up her mind to wed a certain man that certain man was as good as snared. And so, although she felt like clawing the placid features of her husband-to-be, she dissembled.

Lord Leftover stepped to the glass, adjusted his tie, pulled down his vest and stepped to the piano. Dashing off a few random chords, he began, in his rich baritone:

"FORGOTTEN."

"Forgotten are the sunny days,
When I was rich as Croesus;
I spent so much in various ways
I almost got paresis.
Some people call it par-esis,
With the accent on the "par,"
But that is neither here nor there,
Neither here nor there!

Chorus: [illegible]

"Forgotten, forgotten,
The princesses I adored;
Some of them loved me enough, I think,
To pay for my blooming board.
I might have married a title grand
And owned many an English acre.
But I quickly forgot all that bally rot
When I met sweet Phyllis Baker."

The sweet, blue eyes of our heroine filled with tears when she had heard Lord Leftover to the end

"Thank you, lord!" she exclaimed, simply. "You sing grand!"

How to Become a Joke Writer

Copyright, 1912, by American-Journal Examiner. Great Britain Rights Reserved.

"WHO writes all these jokes?"

It is an old, old question, asked over and over again. Why any one is anxious to know all the dippy ones who write those paragraphs with the rich, nutty flavor passes understanding. But so long as they do, and so long as there are thousands who aspire to the noble art of joke writing, our multum-in-parvo correspondence school course would be incomplete without devoting a lesson to the subject that will enable our bright students to acquire the art of joke writing in a few moments.

First, what is a joke?

Answer—It is a joke. In fact, most jokes are like that. That is, the only joke about them is the fact that the author solemnly perpetrates them in the belief they are funny.

FIRST LESSON.—Take an old joke—there are no new ones—and let down the hem, take a little in on the bias and stitch a few frills down the seams, and there you are.

In other words, take that ancient and honorable quip:

"What have you in the shape of oranges?"

"Baseballs."

After you recover from your uproarious laughter at this, dear student, take it seriously. This is not the season to spring a baseball joke. It is Winter. Hence it should be written like this:

"What have you in the shape of oranges?"

"Snowballs."

Do you get me? Or if it is a green Winter, change the scene to a restaurant. Ask the waiter the same question and make him reply "*Fish*balls." Understand now? Isn't it simple? And isn't it just too horribly fetchingly funny for anything?

SECOND LESSON.—Then there is the parody—simplest of all forms of joke*s*. Take the celebrated "Mary's Lamb" verse. Just write something different, like this:

"Willie loved a little lamb
With hair a golden glow;
He met her in a drug store once
And learned what made it so."

Now is the time to get your material ready for the 1912 Christmas magazines, which will soon go to press, so we give you this dainty little quatrain for a hint:

"'Twas the night before Christmas,
And all through the house
We could hear papa's voice—
He came home with a souse."

THIRD LESSON.—Now for the deeper and more intricate English joke, such as convulses the sturdy Briton as he sits at tea and muffins:

Vicar's wife (to the gardener)—And how is your wife to-day, Beeks?

Beeks (wiping tears from his eyes)—Thank ye, I fears as 'ow she be recoverin'.

Do not think these are easy to write. They are decidedly difficult, and Punch takes great care to accept only the most difficult. Get so you can dash off these things and you will have the whole English nation laughing within two hours after it reads them.

FOURTH LESSON—The conversational joke, such as is used by every newspaper to fill up little chinks in the pages, is of the simple form, but should be studied carefully. With great care you will be able to discern the new ideas and shun them. All editors fear them. They know nothing of them and will take no chances. The old standard jokes have served for generations and a publisher has to be careful. Here is the idea:

Jinks—I see Smith has mortgaged his house.

Blinks—I didn't know he had bought an auto.

Now, follow this lesson carefully. With care this standard joke may be used 465 ways. We cannot, of course, give you all the methods of using this joke, but a few examples will suffice and from this you may go on indefinitely:

Blinks—Jones has bought an auto.

Jinks—I thought his house was already mortgaged.

Or:

Blinks—I see Jones has changed his touring car for a limousine.

Jinks—Yes; after they foreclosed on his house he had to have some place to sleep.

And so on. You got me now, do you not, dear student?

With these few forms to guide you, it will not be long before you will be able to make from $3 to $6 a month writing and selling jokes. And this, with stationery and postage deducted, will leave you a clear profit of from $1.50 to $4.

By all means become a joke writer, and then, should you ever get in serious trouble, the testimony of the alienists will get you out on an insanity plea

Is Your Birthday This Week?

Copyright, 1912, by American-Journal-Examiner. Great Britain Rights Reserved.

JAN. 7.—Babies born on this day are generally quite young. If a girl baby, she will be fond of good clothes when she grows up, also inclined to wear shoes a couple of sizes too small. She will dislike washing dishes, and be inclined to prefer diamonds to her birthstone, which is a garnet. She will marry a man with lots of money, or wish she had.

JAN. 8.—Children born on this date will be inclined to cry a little, especially when hungry or when they fall while learning to walk. A boy born this date will be inclined to be a bit wild when about nineteen, and will prefer an automobile to a steady job as a shipping clerk Girls born this date will endeavor to do their hair in the latest modes and will eat fudge upon the slightest provocation.

JAN. 9.—This date indicates that babies born of wealthy parents will be cuddled and fussed over until they will be fortunate if they grow up. If they do, they will surely fight bitterly in the courts if their father leaves all his money to a manicure lady.

JAN. 10.—Girls born on this date will not begin to take much interest in their clothes for two years. Boys whose birthday falls on this date will probably learn to smoke cigarettes before they are sixteen, and will be taking an interest in musical comedies a few years later. When they marry they will be disposed to take the part of Good Samaritans and sit up late with sick friends quite frequency.

JAN. 11.—Babies born on this date of parents who are leaders in smart society will find it difficult to become very well acquainted with them, and later it will be even more difficult to keep track of papa's various wives, or their mamma's various husbands.. They will be apt to attain great fortune through legacies from many papas and mammas-in-law, which will be of great benefit to them when they reach the alimony-paying stage.

JAN. 12.—Babies born on this day of the month will show marked tendencies to play when young. Girl babies will be fond of dolls, and boy babies will be inclined to like go-carts and candy. When the girls marry they will be disposed to ask their husbands for money. When the boys grow up they will be anxious to marry—until after marriage.

Why Woman's Cause Must Triumph

The Ingenious and Philosophic Dr. Max Nordau Explains That When Academies and Kings Have Spoken Against an Idea, Its Hour of Final Victory Must Be at Hand.

By Dr. MAX NORDAU, Author of "Degeneration," "The Right to Love," etc.

THE five academies, which, taken together, form the Institute of France, at a general meeting here resolved upon a decision in regard to an important problem—whether women should be admitted to academic honors. This is an epochal event. It heralds the triumph of feminism, which is simply the recognition of the equality of woman's work with man's wherever it is proved to be equal.

The speakers for the most part inveighed again women, only two of the academicians attempting a luke-warm defense therein. The assembly, by an overwhelming majority, voted the proposition down.

The essential point is not the vote; it is the mere fact that they did deliberate over it. Academies which combat the approach of all new ideas by mere haughty silence, only take notice of them upon the eve of the day when the coming triumph of the idea is certain. For example, Darwinism had conquered the world before the Academy of Sciences for the first time pronounced the word "Evolution," and even then it produced a reaction as if some most elementary absurdity had been suggested. Again, for ten years Pasteur had demonstrated experimentally the germ theory of the origin of contagious diseases when the Academy of Medicine refused to take the great scientist seriously and sought to humble a chemist so audacious as to meddle in the fields of pathology.

In 1878, a member of the Academy of Sciences made so bold as to produce before that learned body the first phonograph, the scientific demonstration of which had been made by the inventor himself; whereupon a speaker arose in indignation to protest against the shameless charlatan who sought to hoodwink a body of scientists by a vulgar trick of ventriloquism!

To-day the academies are awakening to the existence of feminism. They do not boycott it, but they declaim against it. Therefore the unmistakable significance is that the advent of feminism is at hand.

Many other arguments force me to the same conclusion. From certain early Fathers of the Church to Schopenhauer, misogynists have been absolutely innumerable, and have been considered persons of some spirit. All of them have so declared themselves in public, reserving, however, the right to ask from some especially favored member of the fair sex a sweet pardon in private.

To-day the orthodox, traditional misogynist has become so rare that only vanity-crazed or notoriety-seeking victims of hysteria, who can only obtain their ends by scandal, declare themselves enemies of women. In these latter times I recall but two or three who have tried to make a name in that way. There was Moebius, an obscure professor at Leipzig, who had a certain following of readers when he published one of the most imbecile of books, "The Imbecility of Women." Then there was that poor lunatic, Metesche, whose hatred and contempt for women was not the least of his foolishness. There was also his disciple Weininger, another lunatic, but rather more idiotic, who realized his exact worth in one of his lucid moments and committed suicide, after publishing some hundreds of pages of idiotic drivel about "Sex and Character," in which he sought to force interest by screaming out insults against women. Now, since feminism has inspired the crazy pseudo-scientific lucubrations of Moebius, the raucous bellowings of Zarathustra and the senseless nonsese of Weininger, its cause is evidently won.

But we can give evidence of a more elevated kind. Emperor William is certainly not a man of a banal type; he values the maintenance of his own personality and does not hesitate to run counter to popular tendencies. Not only in matters of the theatre of literature and music, but even in theology and politics, he voluntarily sets himself against the prevailing fashions. And so, in his famous Koenigsberg address, in which he called himself, with all becomin modesty, the "instrument of God," he expressed himself upon feminism, pronouncing himself its unchangeable foe: "We take care of children and her kitchen—and pray!"

If so original a mind as the German Emperor expresses such beliefs, the general public conviction is most assuredly the very man is destined for the care of children and for the church; let her opposite. What if the words of William II., pronounced in 1910, had already been said by Napoleon I. a hundred years before? May not the same words when repeated at different times have a change in meaning? Thiers was not too much to be laughed at when he said in 1838, in a discussion in Parliament about railroads in France: "Railroads are toys which will soon pass out of style!"

But think that impression a statesman would make to-day who should venture to repeat such a remark! Indeed, the words of Napoleon I., repeated after one hundred years, do sound somewhat differently! The Emperor is dogmatizing against feminism; therefore feminism must be on the eve of conquering the world!

The academies will open to women, and I think that Madame Curie will yet be the first to illumine the Academy of Sciences at Paris with her smile.

The observer must, however, bear this in mind: In the discussion of the admission of women, begun in the newspapers and continued at the general convocation of the academy, the partisans of the fair sex were all members of the Academy of Sciences, while the adversaries all belonged to other branches of the Institute. This phenomenon may be variously interpreted. It may be said that scientific men lack prejudice, and have a more developed sense of things as they are, hence they are more accessible to the changes going on in real life, to the impulses of progress; while litterateurs are absorbed in the past, attached to traditions, and are tenacious in resisting the demands of life. This is the politest explanation. But there is another one much less polite.

Scientists, perhaps, are no less retrograde than literary men, but it is very easy for them to assume the air of ardent radicals, a small set of polite revolutionists, because the pose brings no risk with it. What can they lose in having a woman member of the Academy? Now, it happens to be Madame Curie. When they have very politely offered her a chair at the meeting, there will be very few other lady candidates to worry about. I really do not know of any other woman in Europe or America who could justly claim title recognized by competent judges to admission in an Academy of Sciences.

There was Madame Kowalewsky, who taught mathematics at Stockholm. She made no claim to public honors. There were the Misses Klumpke, two Californians, one of whom was devoted to astronomy and was the esteemed collaborator of Maurice Loewy, director of the Observatory at Paris, while the other successfully took up neurology, and married Professor Dejerine, Raymond's successor to the chair of Charcot at the Salpetriere. Both gave promise, but the promise was never fulfilled.

Madame Curie, then, is to-day the only one of her sex who occupies a university chair in science and she will be for a long time to come the only one to occupy a seat in the Academy. No other woman gives evidence of threatening the places which the men look upon as exclusively their own. The members of the Academy of Sciences may calmly look upon themselves as innovators, modernists and patrons of women. Their precedent of today will not be a dangerous one, nor need they fear that they are aiding dangerous competition.

It is true that Madame Curie has been involved in a personal unpleasantness since she was a candidate for the Academy, but since her candidacy is based on her scientific work, what has her private life to do with it? No inquiry is made into the sentimental affairs of the male academicians. If women are received at all they must be received on account of their achievements. At present they may be rejected simply because they are women, but when they are accepted it must be on the same grounds as men and not because they are model wives or sweethearts.

The attitude of the literary men towards women is very different from that of the scientists. They tremble—and with reason—before the formidable attack of the Amazons. Really, the women who write are too numerous to count. Those who know how to make good soup or darn a sock as it should be darned are beginning to be rarer than those who know how to write pleasing verses, to put together a not indifferent novel, or to construct a passable play. Women are invading every part of the literary field. They block men's way to success, steal away their readers—or should I say readeresses?—and the honors and official recognition as well.

Why should not the Nobel Prize, next year, go to a woman—to the Swedish author Selma Lagerloef? Has not the crown of literature in Germany fallen to a woman, the Austrian Maria von Ebner-Eschenbach? In Italy, Ada Negri, Matilda Serao Graize Deledda are among the most prominent of living writers.

In France the verses of the Countess de Noailles, the Duchess de Rohan and Mesdames Mardrus and Catulle-Mendes are most highly praised. Everywhere one hears of the novels of Bertheroy, Colette, Willy, Marcelle Tinayre and Miriam Harry. "Marie Claire," the novel of the little dressmaker, Marguerite Audoux, is the sensation of the day. Madame Judith Gautier has taken a place among the first ten of the Academie Goucourt, and as for the theatre, Madame Severin has reached the high-water mark with her "Affranchis." I do not have to follow this enumeration into other countries. It would be one unending litany of praise.

Well, then, what is left exclusively for men? Certainly not journalism, which numbers in its ranks many charming colleagues in skirts. Is there no place sacred? Yes, the Academy! The hostile flood breaks upon its walls, but does not beat them down nor shake them, even. Let but a single crevice open and there will be an overwhelming flood, which will expel, scatter and crush the defenders without mercy. Above all this will flutter triumphant a flag of feminism, where gleam upon a field of gold a "dream" of a dress and a tremendous "picture hat" with enormous plumes!

There will be no lack of courage in the defence of the fortress. The assault will be formidable and repeated at ever shortening intervals, for the attack will have the irresistible incentive of the forbidden fruit. It is true that the academic dress is none too beautiful. That straight-cut, old-fashioned uniform in severe style, with its ill-assorted colors, that three-cornered tasselled hat and absurd sword make up a very unesthetic ensemble. But to wear it is a rare privilege, and woman, the unswerving foe of equality, is an enthusiast for all privileges. But it is quite within the bounds of possibility that the genius of woman will make the academy uniform as attractive as a "princess gown" or a "tailor-made," surmounted by an "aigretted toque."

We find the academic uniform ugly because hitherto it has only been worn by men—and all old and ugly at that! But imagine, instead, what it would look like on a really pretty woman! Ladies well know how to make it a model of elegance. There are elements in it that a skilled dressmaker could use with extraordinary results. Even I—far though I am from being a dressmaker either by habit or taste—foresee the marvelous combinations to which the black gown will lend itself. I can imagine the lining of the hood and sleeves embroidered in green and applique, the three cornered hat adorned with an ostrich plume, and even the sword an object of beauty. Yes, even the sword! A lady thus clad, entering the convention hall, will make a tremendous impression! And the day will come!

A Character Sketch of Dr. Max Nordau

If I were an authoress I would not lose my time seeking admission to a masculine academy. I would found one for women only.

There are many talented women in the world, some of genius fully capable of making such a body speedily famous.

Women, make your own academy, and the other one—the men's—will decline. The men will humbly come to ask a place among you. Nor will you refuse to welcome them, for you are good and charitable, and pity is the fndamental virtue of women.

The establishment by women of an academy open to both sexes would, it seems to me, be a more glorious triumph for feminism than the admission of two or three women to an academy of men.

When Combination Becomes Monopoly, What Shall Fix Prices?

WHEREas appointed from every State and representing it A wevery State, as provided for in the Hearst Federal Incorporation bill, would possess in its records all the facts relating to the size, character and condition of every Federal corporation.

The Inter-State Commerce Commission, increased in numbers and divided into various departments, would deal with extortionate charges and monopolistic abuses in various lines of business.

The Inter-State Commerce Court, increased, if necessary, in numbers and divided into divisions, would review and enforce the findings of the Inter-state Commerce Commission.

I would add to my original Commerce Court bill, however, a clause providing that the justices of this court be appointed for twelve-year terms, and that one-third of these justices end their terms during every presidential term of four years.

The object of this provision is to allow the President of the United States, the chief elected representative of the people of the whole United States, largely to alter the character and complexion of the Commerce Court during his term of office, in conformity with the principles and purposes entertained by the citizens at the time of his election.

In two presidential terms the character and complexion of the Commerce Court could be completely altered fully to harmonize with the principles and purposes of the people as expressed by the successive elected representatives of the people.

IN THESE DAYS OF INSOLENT ASSUMPTION OF LEGISLATIVE FUNCTIONS BY THE COURTS, SOME SUCH PROVISION IS NECESSARY TO RESTRAIN THEIR ARBITRARY APPROPRIATION OF POWER, AND SUCH A PROVISION MIGHT INDEED BE APPLIED BY A CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT TO THE SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES, IF UNCONSTITUTIONAL ASSUMPTION OF LEGISLATIVE FUNCTIONS BY THE SUPREME COURT SHOULD MAKE FURTHER CONSTITUTIONAL RESTRAINT NECESSARY.

In any event, such a provision applied to the Commerce Court would tend to obviate the present unsatisfactory situation where an Inter-state Commerce Court is mainly engaged in upsetting and reversing the necessary acts of the Inter-state Commerce Commission, performed in accordance with the needs and demands of the country.

With the justices of the Commerce Court appointed for limited terms, as above described, and with the members of the Inter-state Commerce Commission, the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, and all his representatives removable at the pleasure of the President, the people need only elect an honest and able President to secure an able and honest conduct of all the important affairs with which these courts and commissions would have to deal.

Matters under the control of these courts and commissions and subject to serious difference and dispute would be submitted as issues in presidential elections and so decided.

BUSINESS WOULD BE CONDUCTED, AS IT SHOULD BE, UNDER A GENERALLY WISE AND JUDICIOUS CONTROL AND IN THE BEST INTERESTS OF THE WHOLE PEOPLE WHO, AFTER ALL, MAKE BUSINESS POSSIBLE AND MAKE POSSIBLE THE SUCCESS OF EVERY BUSINESS.

ANY SYSTEMATIZATION AND ORGANIZATION AND REASONABLE REGULATION OF BUSINESS ALONG THESE LINES WOULD BE A BOON TO BUSINESS.

IT WOULD REPLACE DISORDER AND DISORGANIZATION WITH ORDER AND ORGANIZATION.

IT WOULD REPLACE UNCERTAINTY WITH CERTAINTY.

IT WOULD REPLACE PERPLEXITY AND CONFUSION WITH DEFINITE KNOWLEDGE, AND, FINALLY, IT WOULD REPLACE IGNORANT, IRREGULAR ATTACK WITH INTELLIGENT, SYSTEMATIC REGULATION.

Business should prosper, not only because of such assured conditions, but also because of the fullest freedom to adopt combination and modern methods conducive to cheaper production.

The public should be equally benefitted, for they would participate in the prosperity and get the benefit of cheaper products in cheaper prices.

Under such a scientific system of combination, brought to a pitch of highest efficiency, the greatest amount of wealth would be created and under reasonable regulation by government, the division of wealth would be just and equable and impartially advantageous to all.

THE CREED TO BE—By Ella Wheeler Wilcox

OUR thoughts are moulding unmade spheres,
And, like a blessing or a curse,
They thunder down the formless years,
And ring throughout the universe.

We build our futures by the shape
Of our desires, and not by acts.
There is no pathway of escape;
No priest-made creeds can alter facts.

Salvation is not begged or bought;
Too long this selfish hope sufficed;
Too long man reeked with lawless thought,
And leaned upon a tortured Christ.

Like shriveled leaves, these worn-out creeds
Are dropping from Religion's tree;
The world begins to know its needs,
And souls are crying to be free.

Free from the load of fear and grief,
Man fashioned in an ignorant age;
Free from the ache of unbelief
He fled to in rebellious rage.

No church can bind him to the things
That fed the first crude souls evolved;
For, mounting up on daring wings,
He questions mysteries all unsolved.

The blatant voice of braying doubt,
He hears the still, small voice of Love,
Which sends its simple message out.

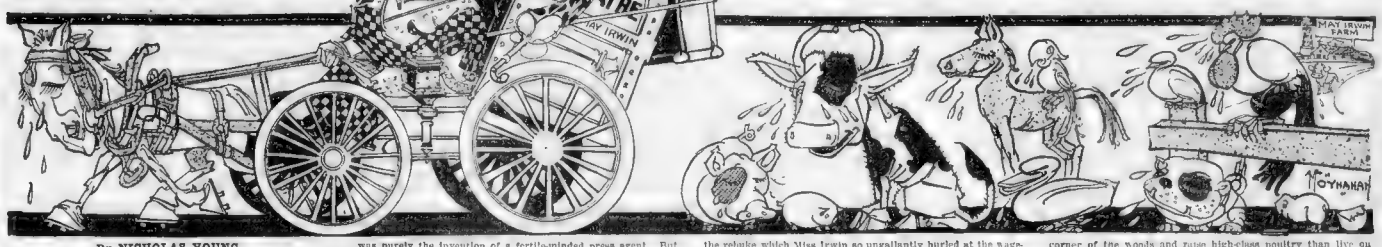
And clearer, sweeter, day by day,
Its mandate echoes from the skies:
"Go roll the stone of self away,
And let the Christ within the rise."

May Irwin Says:

Mr. Nick Young Reports Miss Irwin's Views on the Male of the Species—on Hens, Cauliflower and Solomon—The New Haven Railroad ("How Would You Like to Be the Wife of a Railroad Man?")—Successful Men, Peacocks, and Incubators Blessed With a Maternal Instinct—Could You Ask for Anything Better? Says Mr. Young.

"The stage is the greatest place in the world to remind you how much better and sweeter things are at home—on the farm.

"It is just as well, too, to remember that for many of us there would have been no farms, no cows and no poultry if there had been no stage."



By NICHOLAS YOUNG.

ART that begins on the stage may end almost anywhere—in the kitchen, the stable or the hen house. In the case of Miss May Irwin art not only embraces this entire list, but takes on such subsidiary side lines as potatoes, green peas and cauliflower, which may be accepted as unimpeachable evidence that the well-nourished comedienne is an all 'round woman of some consequence.

May Irwin's art is nature itself—and as broad as her shoulders—she makes open confession of this and dares you to pick flaws in it, which, of course, you don't dare to do when you learn that her morning exercise, when at home on her Clayton, N. Y., farm, is to lead a young and emotional bull around the place by the horns. You feel that it is more in the line of prudence to take her word for everything. And yet you secretly and silently agree that the art of making life cheerful, and spreading the doctrine, is purely Miss Irwin's by a large majority. Of that you are certain, because you have felt it—and enjoyed it's warm exhilaration.

Crowded into a small dressing room at the Plymouth Theatre—and two well-developed persons can completely crowd the modern dressing room—Miss Irwin talked of her art—her farm yard art—and I listened. "It's hard to tell," she began, "what I miss most when I leave the farm for forty weeks of dingy dressing rooms and discouraging hotels. Can you imagine the tragedy of being dragged away from your cattle, your poultry and your own kitchen to live the wretched life of an actress? Don't laugh—it is, indeed, a tragedy."

From the top of a bulging trunk I suggested that perhaps the public didn't take that view of it, and besides she hadn't said what part of the farm she held in sweetest memory.

"Really, it's hard to tell—my whole life at home is so delicious that to select its sweetest spots is a positive problem. But I do honestly believe that I yearn more for my big kitchen than anything else. Not that I am disloyal to my cows and hens, but I must confess that I am a bit daffy about cooking. I am really the happiest when I can wade elbow deep in fresh dough and know that when the oven has done its faithful duty my table will have the best bread or cake in the United States.

"Don't be shocked, but primarily I am a cook, not an actress. How I do love my kitchen. Why, it's eight times as big as this dressing room, so why wouldn't I rather be in it?" and Miss Irwin edged away from a protruding table only to collide with a door on the other side of the room.

From my perch on the trunk I confessed a partial knowledge to Miss Irwin's ability to blend flour and other things into delicious articles for table use. "You once wrote a cook book, didn't you?" I asked.

"Indeed, I did," and Miss Irwin gave positive assurance to the answer. "It was one of the best things I ever did, and it was on the level, but there were rumors at the time that I was purely the invention of a fertile-minded press agent. But it was a regular cook book in every particular and every recipe in it was my own. If it hadn't made me mad I would have thought it a wonderfully good joke to credit a first-class book to a press agent. But that took, too, was my pet and it was a terrible thing to have it claimed on a press agent who had probably never eaten a meal outside of a restaurant since he left home."

"Then there is an art that belongs to the kitchen," I suggested with a question mark in my voice.

"Not only an art, but a most wonderful art—an art that is born with every woman. It is as much the part of every woman as the maternal instinct. To be sure all women are not good cooks; neither are they all good mothers—but the primal instinct is there just the same, a divine gift to mankind. After all, when you get under the surface of things, you always find that God has left the most important things in life to the care of women. Man assumes much in the management of the world, but he does so little that is really important that sometimes he strikes me as being a rather pathetic figure.

"It is getting away from cooking, but doesn't the male of the species strike you as being something of a peacock all for show and of no special use except to strut around and look like a Solomon.

In self-defense for my sex I reminded Miss Irwin that ever she had inadvertently acknowledged the superiority and wisdom of Solomon, who after all was a man.

"Of course Solomon was a brilliant man," she explained "and wise beyond his fellow men, because he recognized the true worth of women. Didn't he have 866 women help him hold his job? It was probably the wisdom of the wives that gave Solomon his reputation. It is just the same to-day. Most successful men, if they are honest, will tell you that their success came through their wives. Of course, most men are not honest enough to confess it, or intelligent enough to know it, so our sex is deprived of proper credit. However, we are so accustomed to the situation that most of us accept it silently."

"Let's go back to the kitchen," I pleaded, deeply stung by the rebuke which Miss Irwin so ungallantly hurled at the wage-earning half of the human race.

"Why not visit the henhouse?" she asked. "One can find much to interest him there."

"Well—isn't that the kitchen?" I trembled at my own courage. It was a flat joke and I felt the recoil, although it never touched Miss Irwin.

"I suppose," continued the lady, unmindful of my sad remark, "that next to my kitchen, my department of poultry is the choicest of my possessions. Here is where you get closest to nature—living creatures that represent skill and care—yes, even art, in their fine breeding. Why, you cannot imagine the pleasure that seized me at the recent poultry show in Madison Square Garden when I failed to find an exhibit there, and there were hundreds, that in any way excelled mine in the popular points of poultry raising. Everybody was praising my chickens and it was sweeter to my ears than the most enthusiastic applause that ever greeted me in a ragtime number on the stage.

"You see," she rambled on "being a lady farmer imposes important responsibilities that are greater than anything offered by the stage. In poultry competition merit and real achievement win the prizes; on the stage a mere knack frequently turns the trick. Stage success may be won by cleverly designed tricks of comedy or situation, but in poultry there is no tricks—everything is controlled by merit."

But hens are so uninteresting." I attempted to argue, how can a woman trained in city life, brought up in the atmosphere of the stage and its bright lights find happiness in brushing selected eggs through an incubator? Is there any answer?" and I waited.

If that isn't just like a man"—there was pity in her voice. "In spite of all the beautiful things that nature has given you to enjoy you are still artificial to the core—totally blind to the things that stand for something worth while and only interested, apparently, in shallow frivolities. Why, I believe our cities, with their artificialities, are ruining the race perhaps spoiling the nation. I would rather live in a remote corner of the woods and raise high-class poultry than live on Fifth avenue. The former means a life of usefulness—the latter a life of uselessness."

"But you will admit"—I was sure I could trip the lady farmer—"you will admit that even chicken raising may be artificial, for I have your own word for it that you use incubators. You cannot call that natural." I shifted my position on the trunk and arranged for a proper enjoyment of Miss Irwin's embarrassment at being found out.

But she was calm and composed. "Incubators are perfectly legitimate, because they are a useful aid to nature. The most uninteresting period in a hen's life is when it is just a plain egg. Now, setting hens are a good deal like mothers—they are limited in their power of doing things. When we come face to face with this situation in poultry we fall back upon the incubator, just as the human family falls back upon the incubator. Incubators are an aid to nature—not a substitute."

Here we were wandering aimlessly about, with our minds and voices filled with incubation, and never giving a thought to the more immediate subject of Miss Irwin's relation to the stage, which, though it might be of lesser importance when forced into comparison with the art of the kitchen, stable and henhouse, was nevertheless occupying a good deal of her time at the Plymouth Theatre.

What of the stage?" she inquired, repeating my question. Why, the stage is the greatest place in the world to remind you how much better and sweeter things are at home—on the farm. It is just as well, too, to remember that for many of us there would have been no farms, no cows and no poultry if there had been no stage. So after all my chickens owe a good deal to the theatre—that is, if they expect to keep me as their mother."

Miss Irwin frankly conceded that she was still devoted to ragtime, which coming from an exclusive and artistic developer of fancy fowl was some concession. And still I knew she could not have entirely turned her back upon the style of melody that she, first of all the comediennes of our stage, had made popular many years ago.

"Do you know," she reflected, "I picked up a bully little tune a song the other day. I was riding from Great Barrington to New York on one of the side lines of the New Haven Road, and the conductor told me how much happier he was on the branch line than when he worked on the main division. He was now able to spend every night at home. There was less honor in his present job, but he had every night and all day Sunday with his family. The title the conductor's story suggested to me was, 'How Would You Like to Be the Wife of a Railroad Man?'—rather a long title, perhaps, but one that I think is ripe with possibility.

And so it was made clear that Miss Irwin's art is infinite and elusive—it keeps time with syncopated melodies, it smells of the pantry and kitchen, and it takes you through the stable to the poultry houses, where even the incubators are blessed.

Could you ask for anything better?

He said, with fine paternal instinct.

MARRIED LIFE THE THIRD YEAR - - -

No. 5—In Which Warren Leaves a Midnight on a Western Business Tr

By MABEL HERBERT URNER

WARREN had promised to come home early. His train left at 11:44, and Helen had hoped he could spend part of the afternoon as well as the evening with her. But it was after 6 when he came.

"Couldn't get here any earlier," as he shrugged out of his overcoat. "Things came piling in at the last moment—they always do. Got the trunk packed?"

"Yes, dear, it's all ready."

"Let's have a look at it. Here're the papers I want put in," taking up a package he had brought from the office.

Helen followed him into the bedroom and watched anxiously as he took out the tray of the neatly packed trunk.

"What's this you've got here?"

"Oh, that's your chest protector. I thought you might have some very cold weather out there."

"All right. But here, this isn't the way to pack a coat," taking it out and refolding it. "Where's that other gray suit?"

"Why, I didn't put that in, dear. I didn't know you'd want so many. Will you be gone long enough to need——"

"Don't know how long I'll be gone. How many times must I tell you that? But I'm going to take that gray suit. Bring it here and I'll put it in right now."

He took it from the hanger, folded it up and packed it tightly in the trunk. Warren had strong capable hands. He could always pack a trunk or tie up a package in more "ship shape" fashion, and with more dispatch and precision, than any one else.

While Helen had packed the trunk neatly, things were laid in "flat." And now he took most of them out, rolled them up tight and fitted them in much more compactly.

"Now how about this tray?" setting it back in the trunk and glancing over it hurriedly. "You haven't left room enough for those papers—they've got to go in here. Wait, these handkerchiefs can go on top of the ties, and that collar box on this side. There, that fits in all right. Now hand me those papers."

Helen gave him the package of papers and he fitted them in where the collar box had been.

"Now, that's better," slamming down the lid. "I'll pack that suit case after dinner. By George, I'm tired," taking off his coat and throwing himself on the couch with a yawn. "It's been a blamed hard day. Turn out that light there, and I'll see if I can't get a nap before dinner."

Helen turned out the light, threw a steamer rug over him and quietly left the room.

And this was his last evening with her! In a few hours he would be on his way to California—and yet he was spending a part of these precious few hours in sleeping.

She went out to see about the dinner. It was to be a very special dinner to-night, of the dishes which Warren particularly liked, and the table was set with the best china and silver. But he would probably not notice the table any more than he had noticed the little blue gown Helen was wearing, the one he had once said he liked best.

He had hardly looked at her when he came in.

"It's all ready, ma'am. Shall I serve it now?" asked Delia.

"No, wait a few moments, Delia. Mr. Curtis is so tired; he's laid down for a little nap, and I know he won't want to be awakened so soon."

"Dinner won't be good if it stands," grumbled Delia. "The time to serve things is when they's ready."

In a few moments Helen stole quietly back into the room where Warren lay. One hand was under his head, and the other fell limply over the side of the couch. His hair was rumpled and his face slightly flushed with sleep.

Very softly she moved over to the couch and knelt down beside him. It was time to awaken him, but she wanted him this way for a few moments—all to herself. She always felt very near him when he was asleep. There is a certain helplessness and the boyishness about a strong man when he sleeps that always appeals to the mother-love in the woman that loves him.

And now very softly Helen touched her lips to his shoulder—then to his hair. To her his hair seemed always to hold a fragrance all its own. Then as he did not stir, very, very gently she kissed his neck and then his forehead.

How long would it be before she would see him again like this? Desperately she tried to hold to these moments to fix in her mind every outline of his face and form as he lay there, so she could the more vividly have him with her in the long weeks he would be away.

And his warm sleeping breath against her cheek, and the feel of the rough cloth of his coat and the silky softness of his tie—she knew how it would all be with her, how she would live it all over again and again.

Suddenly he opened his eyes, stared at Helen, then yawned and stretched his arms.

"Um—m—m. How long have I been asleep?"

"About twenty minutes, dear. Dinner's waiting now."

"All right, drowsily, again closing his eyes.

"Oh, but Warren, you mustn't go to sleep again. It's after seven and you've got your suit case to pack after dinner."

With another prolonged yawn he sat up, stretching his arms and bringing them back to his shoulders with a dumb bell motion.

"Jove, I was tired!

Helen, who had now sat down on the couch beside him, drew his head over to her shoulder and rested her cheek against his.

"Oh, dear, DO let me purr over you a moment—it may be so long before I can again."

"Well, there's not much time for purring now," looking at his watch and then getting up in spite of her protesting arms. "I've ordered a cab for eleven—that train leaves at 11:44."

Helen forced herself to mimic over the dinner, but the little she ate almost choked her. She sat facing the clock on the dining room mantel. The minute hand seemed almost to fly around—and each moment brought nearer the dreaded hour.

She had resolved that even at the parting she would keep back the tears, she would not cling to him, not let him see how dreadfully she dreaded the separation. Not only did he hate a "scene" as he would call it, but she did not want him to carry away the vision of red eyes and a swollen, tear-stained face.

She had determined, too, that she would not ask him how often he would write. It always irritated him for her to try to pin him down to any promises, and she knew nothing she could say would make him write a single letter more than he felt inclined. And yet when she was helping him to pack the suit case she could not keep back the question.

"Dear, you'll write very often—won't you?"

"Often as I can."

"You know how anxious I'll be when I don't hear."

"Well, I'm going on a business trip, you know. I'll have something to do beside writing letters."

"But if you could only write just a line—say every other day, knowing how unwise was her persistence, yet not being able to control it.

"Now see here"—he began harshly, but was interrupted by the telephone. "That's the taxicab now," as he went to answer it.

"Oh, no, it's too early—it CAN'T be!" cried Helen excitedly, panic stricken that the moment of parting had come so soon.

"That's just what it is," putting up the receiver and turning hurriedly to lock and strap the suit case.

In a moment the driver came up for the trunk and dragged it noisily out to the elevator. Warren was already getting into his overcoat. Now that the time had come Helen could only stand by looking helplessly on.

When he came over to kiss her, she clung to him silently.

"Good-by, dear. Don't look so tragic about it. The time will pass quickly—I'll only be gone a few weeks. Take care of yourself—be a good girl. Good-by."

He started toward the door. She was standing motionless where he had left her. With his hand on the knob he paused, then turned, putting down his suit case. With a little cry she was in his arms again.

There, there, Kitten. I'll be back before you know it." And then half reluctant, yet moved to make some concessions at parting, "I'll write often, dear, every other day."

WHATEVER else may be said of the current attractions at the theatres they at least show a cordial inclination toward the sunny side of life. The plays of the week fail to sound a single discordant note which may be taken as evidence of the continued ascendency of smiles. With the single exception of the "Pink Lady" at the Park—which is accompanied by tunes and other accessories of light-hearted amusement—the current reason in the times are extremely favorable to Boston, which in a measure atones for the miserable showing most of them have made in other large cities during the present season. While Boston has cordially accepted nearly all of the season's offerings and supplied consistent and profitable patronage, a different story may be told [illegible] has been carrying on an effective threat [illegible] offices. The happy state of affairs in Boston cannot be credited to any particular style of entertainment that had, for the season has yielded a generous [illegible] kinds. "The Country Boy" holds to view a picture of life that [illegible] has human emotions should see. It is a play that [illegible] home

WITH May Irwin and "She Knows Better Now" the new Plymouth Theatre is having its first experience with farce and rag-time. Miss Irwin, who is never so plump or lovely as when unfurling a mirthful "coon" song, does her plain duty in that respect in her new piece. While its style of entertainment varies but little from the familiar vehicles we have so long associated with Miss Irwin, it may be safely [illegible] new idea in theme if not in the fundamentals of farce. Of course, there is not an unsmiling pound of flesh upon Miss Irwin's ample person, and her wide-spread [illegible] fulness always makes her welcome at this season of the [illegible] Doubtless many play-goers have lost sight of the fact that upon Miss Irwin's broad shoulders lies the responsibility for the early popularity of rag-time melody. She was the first of our public entertainers to turn [illegible] use upon a willing public. It would [illegible] if not positively ungallant, to tell how [illegible] that she became the most popular of our comedienne through "The New Bully" and "All Coons Look Alike to Me," but the lady should have proper credit, nevertheless.

WHEN Mr. Ziegfeld began making "Follies" four years ago he devised a style of entertainment that immediately caught the public fancy. But [illegible] against a serious task when, after his first [illegible] he undertook to rebuild and improve each season. The novelty of the Ziegfeld entertainment is found in the complete reversal of form from the accepted and conventional type of musical entertainment—he does what other producers do not care or do not dare to do—and the [illegible] is comfortable in a business sense, if not [illegible] matter of propriety. This season Mr. Ziegfeld is exceedingly proper in comparison with past performances of [illegible] His travesty on "Everywoman," for [illegible] reveals him in the pure white figure of an uncompromising defender of stage morals. Mr. Ziegfeld fills [illegible] adequately, even at the expense of some of the [illegible] stunts that have made his "Follies" more for men only than for general consumption. The bright spot in this year's "Follies" rests squarely upon Bert Williams, whose work stamps him as an artist without rival in his particular line of comedy. Mr. Williams is the funniest man on the American stage and, single handed, he holds the present "Follies" together.

WHEN Mr. Weber and Mr. Fields get together in the Spring in their well boosted reunion, there will be one figure in the line that will stand by itself and hold its own against all comers. When [illegible] quick proofs [illegible] into active operation don't forget to look for Frankie Bailey, for Frankie will be there with a new set of silk tights and a great willingness to renew acquaintances with $2 audiences. When Mr. Weber and Mr. Fields were jointly interviewed the other day on their project of reunion, both agreed that the whole thing might have to be declared off unless they could entice Frankie Bailey back to the old home. Frankie has always been the main prop with the boys in the front row—she was some queen in the old Weber and Fields days, and she hasn't slackened a bit as the years move on. All of which is to announce modestly, and with no unseemly noise, that Frankie is right in town this week, holding up her end of the drama in the old familiar way at [illegible] Theatre. Yes, sir, you can see her every day this week at the Gaiety—twice a day if you feel that way about it. Frankie isn't the star of Charlie Waldron's "Trocaderos," but she has a part that draws the spot light and holds it when she is in action. Softly, now—she's a posing model, which belongs to a branch of the dramatic art that always engages the human eye with more or less satisfaction. As long as the stage demands posing models, Frankie Bailey will stand at the head of the list.

A FEW weeks ago I mentioned in a general way the [illegible] followed at most theatres of officially announcing a time schedule for the beginning of performances and making it absolutely worthless by paying no attention to its provisions. To advertise a fixed hour for the raising of the curtain and persistently follow a schedule that is ten to thirty minutes late, is both annoying and confusing to those who pay real money for theatrical entertainment. Now comes John D. Schoeffel, who sits by the gate at the Tremont Theatre to see that none slip through without paying, and politely requests that his theatre be scratched from the list of houses with late curtains. "The Tremont Theatre certain always rises at the advertised time," he explained, "because it is the only proper way to run a theatre. I believe I owe it to the public to begin performances at my house on the hour announced, and I have been doing it for many years." Mr. Schoeffel should spread this doctrine among his brother managers.

THE second of John Craig's prize plays will be staged at the Castle Square Theatre late this month. It is called "The Product of the Mill," and, like "The End of the Bridge," which was produced so successfully last year, has a boy part, for which Miss Henrietta McDonnel has been engaged. Rehearsals for the new play have already begun.

"On With the Dance," Now the Call in Society

By ELIZABETH ELLIOTT.

So says the social arbiter and so it is.

Almost every evening of the week past has had some happy dancing event to its credit, and for weeks to come the dance will go on. It will continue the one most important and most popular form of enjoyment.

And so the Winter speeds along and already many are beginning to droop and pine for respite, though the unusual amount of out-of-door entertaining helps some to keep the buds from wilting in the chilling atmosphere of the ball room or the reception room and to keep the roses blooming in the cheeks of all. It's an out-door Winter, and everybody who pretends to keep up with the fads and fancies of fashion have gotten out their skates and toboggans and, as so many children, revel in the glories of the Frost King's realm. And the week-end house parties are the joy of all. But in between these gay good times in the open the dance [illegible]

Leading Events of Past Week.

Among the important events of the week just past was the skating carnival on Monday evening at the Country Club, which Mr. and Mrs. Harry V. Long of Berkeley street, gave for their daughter, Miss Susan Long, along with the almost innumerable dinners given to perfect the affair; the Artists' Festival in Copley Hall on Thursday evening, when almost every member of the smart set pranced about in the most antique of Assyrian costumes; the dance on Friday evening at the Somerset, given by Mr. and Mrs. Francis Sargent in honor of their pretty debutante daughter, Miss Margaret Sargent, and the subscription dance in Brattle Hall, Cambridge, which brought the week to a glorious close.

Besides these events there was no lull in the matrimonial world, for Wednesday the important wedding was that of Miss Bertha Sise of Bay State road and William Morton Priest.

Among the patronesses for the stories from Irish fairy and folk lore which Seumas MacManus of Donegal [illegible] is to give to-morrow afternoon at Jordan Hall at 3 o'clock in aid of the Radcliffe College endowment fund, under the auspices of the class of 1902, are Miss Annie Alden, Mrs. Jeffrey R. Brackett, Mrs. Lefferts Rose, [illegible] Miss Eleanor M. Bucking[illegible], Mrs. Richard Cabot, Miss Mary Coes, Miss Ruth Colt, Miss Ba[illegible]bes, Mrs. W. G. Mr. and Mrs. George B. Deforest who have been the guests of Dr. and Mrs. William Appleton of Beacon street, during which time they were much entertained by their many friends here, have returned to their home in New York. Mrs. Deforest and Mrs. Appleton are sisters.

Mr. and Mrs. Louis Bacon (nee Southerland) whose wedding was the event of the month in Washington are at present in Riverside, California, where they are the guests of Mr. Bacon's mother, Mrs. Francis R. Bacon, who now makes her home there with her son-in-law and daughter, Dr. and Mrs. John Hewetson (Susan Bacon). Before their return Mr. and Mrs. Bacon will visit the West Indies and will return to Boston in April, after which time they will make their home here.

That most interesting [illegible] couples, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Grant, Jr. (Priscilla Stackpole), who were married in Boston a couple of years ago and who are now living abroad, have been the recent guests at a house party given by Mr. and Mrs. Waldorf Astor at Cliveden, their mansion on the Thames in England. The Grants have now returned to their home in London, where they are doing much entertaining and where they will remain throughout the season.

Among Bostonians to pass the late Winter in Europe are Mr. and Mrs. Ezra C. Fitch of Commonwealth avenue, and their pretty daughter, Miss Helen Fitch. They are to sail for the Mediterranean the last of the month and will begin their travels with a tour in Spain and Portugal. Miss Fitch has only recently returned from a long visit with friends in Denver.

So much improved is Judge William Caleb Loring's health that he and Mrs. Loring are planning to return shortly to their town house in Gloucester street from their North Shore villa at Pride's Crossing.

Colt. The ceremony is to take place in St. Stephen's Church in Providence at 1:30 in the afternoon and will be attended by not only the fashionable set of Providence, but that of New York and Boston as well. The ceremony will be performed by [illegible] Fiske, the rector. The bride is to be given in marriage by her father, LeBaron Bradford Colt, and will have her sister, Miss Bessie [illegible] as maid of honor. Her bridesmaids will be Miss Ruth Anthony, sister of the groom, Miss Katherine McCawley, of Ridgeway, Pa.; Miss Virginia Bayley and Miss Gladys Baker of Providence, both members of the Agawam Hunt Club, as is also the bride.

Most of the ushers are Harvard men and most of them classmates of the groom. They are Augustus [illegible] Loring, Jr., who married Miss Rowditch in June; Morton Prince and Robert Fisher of Boston; Edward Martin Gould and Russell C. Colt of Providence, the latter a cousin of Miss Colt; Otis Prescott of Newton, Harold Kavanagh of New Haven, and Joseph A. Locke of Portland, Me. After the ceremony a reception will follow at the Colt home on Waterman street. Upon the return from the honeymoon, the young couple will reside in Longwood.

An interesting bride of the coming month will be Miss Alaide Chatfield Taylor, who is to marry [illegible] Whitman of Brookline. Miss [illegible] is prominent in this winter's group of debutantes in Chicago.

Notice to Fat Women

Presumably you know, ladies, that the proper caper nowadays is lines. Curves are passe. You have got to take off your fat. This must be done in one of three ways. By dieting, by exercise, or by means of Marmola Prescription Tablets. The two former will keep you busy for months and punish you pretty severely, the latter will cost you 75 cents at the druggist's. The tablets will not make any alteration in your diet necessary, and yet in all probability, before you are used up one case, you will be losing from 12 to 16 ounces of fat a day. Which method do you like the best?

If you fancy this pleasant method of getting off the fat, see your druggist instantly or else write the Marmola Co., 1-0 Farmer Bldg., Detroit, Mich., to send you a case by mail. These cases contain so generous a quantity of tablets that the treatment is very economical. It is also quite harmless, for the tablets are made exactly in accordance with the famous Marmola [illegible].

KING GEORGE'S UNCLE TO PRODUCE OPERA

Duke of Argyll Likely to Visit New York When Music Drama Is Taken There.

CONNAUGHTS ALSO COMING

By CHESTER OVERTON.

Special Cable to Sunday American.

LONDON, Jan. 13.—That efficient courtier, Oscar Hammerstein, having partially promised the King's uncle, the Duke of Argyll, to produce his opera, a regular Spring freshet of aristocratic playwriting may be expected. The Duke of Argyll's opera, by the way, will probably be taken to New York after its production here, and the Duke himself may go there to witness the performance.

Argyll is not the only King's uncle who is likely to visit Gotham this year. I am informed on highest authority that an exchange of views has just taken place between the Canadian and Imperial governments regarding a possible visit of the Duke and Duchess of Connaught to the United States. It is believed in government circles that a visit from the Royal Governor-General of Canada would be welcomed by President Taft, and, in addition, it is known that a trip to New York and through the United States is greatly desired by both the Duke and Duchess, who have a great admiration for everything American.

This visit would be arranged for a time when the Governor-General could best be spared from Ottawa and would, it is believed, be substituted for the usual annual hunting trip of his Royal Highness.

London Season's Early Opening.

There is not the slightest foundation for the report that the King and Queen will pay a round of State visits to the European courts this year. King George and Queen Mary are, as a matter of fact, perfectly aware that their prolonged absence has been felt in trade circles. There has been no Winter gaiety in London and trade suffers in consequence. The King and Queen intend, therefore, to open the London season much earlier than usual, and it is just possible the first court will be held at the end of February.

The Majesties will be received with great ceremony when they arrive on the fourth of February. The entire Royal Family will journey to Portsmouth to meet them and London streets will be lined with troops. After a few days at Buckingham Palace the King and Queen will go to Sandringham and will enjoy perfect rest for a week or ten days, returning to London February 14 in order to attend Parliament in state. After that date they intend making Buckingham Palace their headquarters and the London season will probably be unusually long and brilliant.

The only visit contemplated by the King is a brief informal one to Paris in order to receive a wonderful painting by the French Artist Gillot of the great naval review at Portsmouth which was commissioned by the French Government for presentation to King George in order to cement the entente cordiale.

Gay Duchess of Westminster.

The Duchess of Westminster has abandoned her attitude of the injured and neglected wife and is becoming almost as gay and frivolous as Gertie Millar, for whose society the wealthy Duke so frequently strays from his aristocratic fireside. In fact, the Duchess is going to be an actress, too. So perhaps now his lordship can be occasionally induced to turn his wandering glance homeward. The Duchess is pretty, and she can act.

For that matter the whole Cornwallis-West family has a talent for the footlights. The announcement is made that the Duchess has consented to appear shortly at a Folkstone Theatre in a charity performance of a play by Dion Clayton Calthorp. Her Grace has often taken part in amateur theatricals, but this time she will appear in a semi-professional character, as she will have the support of Forbes Robertson's brother.

Can she win back her errant Duke? She will certainly have the support of the whole court, including Queen Mary, whose greatest tact has often been exerted toward bringing them together and eliminating a fascinating Gertie.

Duke a Hero at the Hunt.

Meanwhile the Duchess is enjoying Winter sports in Switzerland, while the Duke is winning honors on the hunting fields of France. The Duke, it appears, recently bought a property on the shores of Lake Aureilhan. His pack of boarhounds this week was running an old and solitary boar, when the beast turned and ripped up a horse driven by an unnamed friend of the Duke, bringing it to the ground. The boar was preparing to make short work of the Duke's friend, when the Duke threw himself down, met the boar at close combat, and saved his friend's life.

Before attacking the horse the boar had already killed two hounds and injured eight others. The newspaper accounts of the incident not only fail to mention the name of the rescued friend, but even neglect to indicate the sex.

But speaking of titled British folk with stage leanings, there is the Marchioness of Townsend, who has achieved the distinction of having a one-act play accepted by Maskelyne and Devant, the conjuring entertainers. The Marchioness is so elated that she is now busily at work on a mystery play which she hopes to induce Rheinhardt to produce. She has been a constant visitor to "The Miracle," Rheinhardt's stupendous production at the Olympia for the purpose of studying his methods.

Curious Card Scandal.

A curious card scandal is likely to form a caus celebre in the courts shortly, unless matters are settled up beforehand. The chief figure is that one-time American hero, the Earl of Yarmouth. The whole trouble seems to have arisen through an odd misunderstanding.

It is well known that the Earl since his divorce from Alice Thaw manages to exist on next to nothing at all. He has lately been made a bankrupt, and the money lenders all refuse to have anything more to do with him. He has to live on an allowance of $1,500 a year which the Marquis Hertford, his father, has again allowed him. He has always been accustomed to associate with actors and others of the free and easy class, and lately he has been trying to live quietly in a garret at the top of a house in Regent street, for which he pays $3 a week.

In this retreat he has passed his evenings playing baccarat and roulette with others as impecunious as himself. This coterie of young men arranged that in order to have the excitement of playing for money without the necessity of paying they would give each other I. O. U's, and the Earl, who has been lucky, was in possession of many I. O. U.'s, ranging from about $25 to about $150.

Imagine the astonishment of his fellow gamblers on receiving a communication from the Earl stating that he must ask them kindly to settle their debts. He denies all knowledge of any understanding that the I. O. U.'s represented merely so much waste paper, and has put the matter in his solicitor's hands.

First Visit of King George and Queen Mary Will Probably Be to Paris.

Special Cable to Sunday American.

LONDON, Jan. 13.—Not for very long will King George and Queen Mary, who both detest traveling, be permitted to enjoy their peaceful home surroundings in England, for state reasons make it necessary for them to start on an extensive tour of visits to the various capitals of Europe.

Their first official visit will most likely be to Paris, which Queen Mary loathes as much as her late father-in-law loved it, from much the same reasons. From Paris the royal couple will return to England, to start shortly afterward for Berlin, St. Petersburg and Copenhagen. Possibly a visit to Holland and Belgium will follow in the Fall, but this may be postponed until 1913.

No European sovereigns are likely to come to London on an official visit until after the King and Queen have visited them in their own capitals.

The German Emperor and Empress came to London in May last, but this was a private and not a state visit, the purpose of the Emperor being to unveil the memorial to his grandmother, the late Queen Victoria.

Foreign monarchs will not, as during King Edward's reign, be entertained at Windsor Castle in November. They will be received at Buckingham Palace during the Summer, and their visits will extend over three days. It is possible that the King and Queen may call at Port Soudan on their way home from India, and that the opportunity may be taken for Lord Kitchener to present to their majesties some of the Berber chiefs. When the King and Queen return, Queen Alexandra, the Prince of Wales, Princess Mary and possibly some of the younger children, will go to Portsmouth to meet them.

The royal stay in London will be short, as the King and Queen intend spending a week or two at Sandringham for rest and quiet after their arduous tour.

PERFUME FROM PETROLEUM

English Chemist Invents Attar of Roses Substitute.

LONDON, Jan. 13.—Peter M. Short, an English chemist, has made an invention which ought to gladden the heart of John D. Rockefeller, for he has succeeded in manufacturing from evil-smelling petroleum an essence which is said to be a perfect substitute for the most precious of all perfumes, attar of roses, the wholesale value of which is about three cents a drop.

Mr. Short admits that he made his discovery quite accidently. He has for several years past been carrying out experiments with liquid air. One of these experiments was to produce a candle from parafin by freezing it. No known natural temperature will freeze paraffin. But at a temperature approximately seventy degrees below zero, which can easily be attained by means of liquid air, paraffin becomes solid.

Mr. Short found that in his experiments certain free agents remained floating at the top. After four years of experiments, he produced this synthetic product, which imitates attar of roses.

QUEEN MARY'S COLLECTION.

LONDON, Jan. 13.—Queen Mary has made a collection of beautiful modern Eastern bric-a-brac, embroideries and other handiwork while in India. She is one of those who have a genuine admiration for good modern things and is not afraid to say so. She has been known to remark that in many instances she considers the beauty of antique things greatly exaggerated. It would surprise many to note the numbers of pictures by modern painters—some of whose names are quite unknown—which adorn her private rooms in the various palaces.

PARIS MYSTIFIED BY TOMB WRECKING

Vault of Mlle. Lanteline Demolished, but Buried Jewels Are Left Behind.

By ROBERT JANVIER.

Special Cable to Sunday American.

PARIS, Jan. 13.—Paris still assumes an incredulous attitude toward the explanation that the desecration of the tomb of Mle. Lantelme was due to the shocking attempt of ghoulish thieves to steal the jewels which were reported to have been buried with the body of the beautiful actress. It is pointed out that the violated vault showed evidence of a frenzy of destruction. Not only were coffins wrenched open, but the mortuary altar was smashed, the cross, statues and vessels shattered and flung into a disordered heap in one corner of the mausoleum.

It is argued that had there been a definite search for the jewels alone of the dead woman the robbers would have devoted themselves solely to that quest and not have wasted their time on these dreadful evidences of a wild and unreasoning savagery. Notwithstanding studies have been made by Bertillon, the famous criminologist, who has the finger marks that were left on the wall of the family vault under consideration, no clue has yet been found of the great violators.

Tore Away Shroud.

The robbers who broke open the vault grave, opened three coffins and tore away the shroud from the body of Mlle. Lantelme, are completely lost in mystery. Blood stains, which traced their way from the violated grave to Ramus Bridge, are now washed away.

It seems remarkable also that the robbers who ransacked Mlle. Lantelme's coffin did not find the jewels under the head of the dead actress, for they were quite bulky. There was a great triple rope of emeralds with pearl pendants, a necklace of fine enormous round pearls with a pendant of an emerald and a pear-shaped pearl, two rings and a portrait of her husband, M. Alfred Edwards.

At any rate these jewels were not taken, and they are now in the possession of M. Edwards.

Death Remains Mystery.

In fact mystery deepens around the very memory of Mlle. Lanteime, whose tragic death took place from a house boat at Emrick, near Cologne, on the Rhine, last July. Her life, death, violated tomb, and now her memory, are all so mysterious that she is classed among the unsolved mysteries of Paris. This is deepened by the statement made to-day that her husband is engaged to marry a young, beautiful and rich widow, who will be the fifth wife for M. Edwards.

People are again discussing passionately the circumstances surrounding the actress's death and ask was it accident, suicide or crime? Certain it is the crime theory is gaining ground, though the wild statements about revolver shots in the door of her cabin are not credited. Those who hold the suicide theory recall that she was nervous when leaving Paris. She had a childish fear of water; was melancholy often, and her eyes invariably wore a look of astonishment and mystery.

CREMATORY FOR DUKE.

Bedford and His Duchess Both in Favor of Cremation.

LONDON, Jan. 13.—The Duke of Bedford, who is one of the most original and, in some ways, progressive of British peers, has, unknown to the general public, just taken a lease for ninety-nine years of a piece of land upon which he has erected a building containing a furnace from the London Cremation Company. This private crematorium will be for the sole use of the family, both the Duke and the Duchess being strongly in favor of cremation.

The Duke of Bedford is a model landlord, but neither he nor the Duchess is very popular in society, owing to their great exclusiveness. The Duchess is an extremely clever and capable woman, and both she and her husband are eminent zoologists. The Duchess's private "zoo" is the finest in the country, and all sorts of wild beasts roam about in a sunken pit. On one part of the estate visitors who wish to see the animals at close quarters enter a miniature armored train, which has several times been unsuccessfully attacked by bisons and gnus.

The Latest Heir to the Throne of Alfonso Is Named After the King's Mother.

THE fourth royal heir to the kingdom of Spain has been christened Maria Christina. The ceremony was attended with much royal and religious pomp, King Alfonso's relatives and representatives of Queen Victoria's family being in attendance.

Spain's royal household is becoming one of the most interesting of all European royalty, both Alfonso and Victoria being devoted to their family cares, thereby winning the affection and admiration of their subjects as no other royal household is doing at the present time.

$125,000 FOR CRUCIFIX.

MADRID, Jan. 13.—A beautiful carved ivory crucifix, which was purchased for the sum of $10 at a rag fair in Reus, Catalonia, twenty-five years ago, has been discovered to be one of the finest carvings of Leonardo da Vinci. Ten years ago the purchaser left this crucifix with her other possessions to her daughter, wife of the deputy, Senor Mayner. No great value had ever been attached to the object, except as a souvenir, until some weeks ago, when a person who was visiting the house offered $500 for it.

Senora Mayner refuse to part with the crucifix, and she also rejected a further offer of $4,500 from an antiquarian, who had heard of the incident and examined the crucifix. A third offer of $125,000 is now said to have been received from an American collector.

MISS BULWER TO WED.

Greatniece of Lord Lytton Will Take Husband Aged 71.

LONDON, Jan. 13.—Much intnerest has been aroused by the announcement that Sir James Crichton-Browne, a veteran physician, is to marry Miss Audrey Emily Bulwer, eldest daughter of the last General Sir Edward Bulwer, and a greatniece of the famous novelist, the first Lord Lytton.

Though Sir James is seventy-one years of age, he is still an interesting lecturer and keen debater. He is a brain specialist, the eldest son of a noted commissioner for lunacy for Scotland, and he has held the position of Lord Chancellor's Visitor in Lunacy since 1875. He is a widower, his wife having died in 1903.

ABRUZZI ON MARRIAGE.

Better Off Single, He Says, Unless Wedding Be One of His Choice.

ROME, Jan. 13.—In a conversation widely discussed here to-day the Duke of Abruzzi has thrown further light on his disposition towards marriage. Speaking of Miss Katherine Elkins, daughter of the late Senator Elkins of the United States, he called her "as estimable a young woman in every way as could be found."

The Duke did not say in so many words, but he left the impression that he had heard from Miss Elkins recently. He said he did not know whether he would ever be married. "A man is better off unmarried unless he is wedded to the one of his choice," he is reported to have said.

TO DRAIN ZUYDER ZEE.

Great Project Again Before People of Holland.

AMSTERDAM, Jan. 13.—A great project is again before the people of Holland—the draining of the Zuyder Zee. The sea, which is at the north of Holland, covers an area of 50,000 hectares, so "Mundus," the polyglot Italian weekly states, a hectare being practically two acres and a half. Just half a century ago a scheme to drain the southern portion of the sea was first mooted, and although it received considerable support, the opposition was greater; but now an association has been formed and a bill, it is stated, will be introduced into the Chamber.

AUTHORS' SONS SHOW LITERARY HEREDITY

By MARQUIS DE CASTELLANE.

Special Cable to Sunday American.

PARIS, Jan. 13.—Just now Paris is witnessing a demonstration of the principle of literary heredity. Jacques Bernard, though only fifteen, is a playwright. He is also the son of Tristam Bernard, the dramatic author.

Maurice Rostant is a poet. Likewise he has the distinction of being the son of Edmond Rostand. He has not yet written a "L'Aiglon" or a "Cyrano de Bergerac," but he will.

Maurice is a poet also on his mother's side, for Rosemonde Gerard Rostand writes some rosy rhymes. With this double current of poetry in the family one may expect a flourishing poetic house of Rostand, over whose portals one will read:

"Poetic House of Rostand. 1889."

Gossips have been saying that Edmond is jealous of the poetry of his son and wife, just as the German Emperor is jealous of the popularity of the Crown Prince and his wife. More likely he is proud of the infant prodigy. But for sure the Academician has shown himself sarcastic.

The name of the play, "The Good Little Devil," upon which Madame Rostand and her son collaborated, is borrowed from the famous Madame de Segur. The other day at their Chateau de Combo, Edmond reminded his wife and son that in the library of Madame de Segur there are other good titles.

"For instance," said he, "there is 'The Two Simpletons.'" Then, turning to Maurice, he said:

"You will also find there 'The Memoirs of An Ass.'"

A Beauty of Three Reigns.

Lady Essex, the charming American, who is known as "The Beauty of Two Reigns," has passed through Paris on her way to St. Raphael, where she will spend the Winter. Lady Essex was formerly Miss Adele Grant, daughter of the late Beach Grant of New York, and was married to the Earl of Essex in 1893. Her mother, Mrs. Beach Grant, is a distinguished member of the Franco-American Society of Paris.

Lady Essex is known as "The Beauty of Two Reigns" because she was a beauty while Edward VII. was on the throne and is a beauty to-day when George V. is reigning. We might even call her a beauty of three reigns, for she was a radiant girl in the late years of Queen Victoria. Lady Essex is the orignal of one of Herkomer's famous portraits. The elder of her two daughters will soon make her bow to society. She is just seventeen and beautiful and distinguished looking like her mother. Lady Essex is probably the only American who has held her place as a reigning beauty under three sovereigns.

Teaching the Young to Club.

Thanks to the energy of an American, a new and unique branch of the Imperial Country Club has just been opened at Nice. The American who has made this venture of adding on a junior branch for boys and girls and one in which girls are in the majority is the Baroness J. de Meyronnet de Saint-Marc, formerly Miss Walker of Atlantic City. The Baroness is very clubable and has the reputation of being the best dancer on the Riviera. Her husband takes a leading part in the elder branch of the Imperial Club.

In the branch which interests the Baroness the young folk have elected a boy president, a boy vice-president, a girl vice-president, and a committee of four girls and three boys.

When presiding at the election the Baroness wore a gold-embroidered gown and a big black hat. Experts say she is the best-dressed woman on the Riviera.

A pretty young dressmaker named Lucie Bagarre will have the noisiest wedding one of these days ever known in France. For most of the students of the Latin quarter will attend, and they are noted above all things for the noise they make. She will also receive a most artistic wedding present, and the students are now in council devising what it should be.

BERLIN IS WORRIED BY YANKEE POKER

Editorial Says Germany Is Becoming Americanized, Especially in Gambling.

By COUNT VON ELPHBERG.

Special Cable to Sunday American.

BERLIN, Jan. 13.—Tages Zeitung will to-morrow print the following editorial:

"Sometimes Berlin is named the New York of Europe. We resent this appelation, but we fear that there is a bit of justification for it. Noble Germany is becoming Americanized. By that we mean that we are abandoning idealism for realism, high principles for the gospel of dollars, which is the predominant faith of the United States.

"Immorality in private life will take the place of the austere morality of our Evangelical Lutheran North Germany. We see a grave menace to our ancient ideals in the rapid spread of the game of poker in Berlin society. Poker, we are told, is the national game of America. It is based on bluff and deception and now it is invading our salons, corrupting our women, brutalizing our men and leaving a taint on the rising generation.

"Poker is a symptom of the American peril and hustling is another. Let us suppress hustling in Berlin before it makes life intolerable.

"Let us banish poker from our parlor, our club, our hospitable hearths. Let us substitute for poker the study of our great classic writers like Goethe and Schiller. Let us banish hustling from our shops, our offices, our public places.

"Berlin must not be allowed to become a kind of degenerate New York."

A German soldier must see his father, mother or brother drowned miserably before his eyes and within reach of his rescuing them rather than leave for a moment his post when doing sentry duty. This explains a remarkably tragedy that occurred near Altenstein in East Prussia.

A soldier named Wilhelm Auspitz was doing sentry duty. Close by and before his eyes lay a frozen lake. His own brother fell through the thin ice and struggled for life appealing piteously for help and even calling his brother by name.

To rescue his drowning brother Wilhelm would have been obliged to throw down his rifle, leave his post and plunge into the ice, thereby leaving his post unguarded for some length of time. Quickly reviewing the situation in his mind he resolved to remain faithful to his duty as a soldier and watch his brother drown rather than desert his post. His brother drowned and now Wilhelm's parents and relatives accuse him of cold-blooded indifference to the claims of humanity.

On the other hand, he is praised for his heroic devotion to duty. Almost exactly three year ago a similar case occurred at Breslkowen, Germany, and the sentry who watched a man drown rather than quit his post was formally and officially commended.

PRINCESS FINDS GEMS.

Former Miss Singer of N. Y. Discovers Them Near Her Chateau.

PARIS, Jan. 13.—The Princess Edmond de Polignac, having gone to her chateau to spend her holidays, has just made a discovery of garnets, opals, jacinths, amethysts, sapphires and rubies such as are making the jewelers of Paris green with envy. The Princess was formerly Miss Winneretta Singer, daughter of the late Isaac Singer of New York. She is the widow of the late Prince Edmond de Polignac, whose family took part in the first crusade.

The Princess made her famous discoveries of jewels in the town land of Polignac, which is about three miles from Le Puy Hauteloire. Through her domain flows a river. Here the Princess made her find of precious stones. Polignac has the reputation of being the most picturesque place in the world.

Egypt is the objective point of many well known Americans and Paris Americans, this Winter. Among those who have already gone there are the Marquis and Marquise de Wentworth of New York. The Marquise has been in delicate health since her return from her estate in the Catskills, but strong enough to paint a portrait of the Khedive, in which he appears with all his decorations on.

PARIS POLICE GUARD MORGAN LIKE A KING

UNSOLICITED BY BANKER

By PAUL PIERRE RIGNAUX.

Special Cable to Sunday American.

PARIS, Jan. 13.—Since the arrival of J. Pierpont Morgan in Paris on Saturday last he has been guarded in exactly the same way as King Peter of Servia, King Alfonso of Spain, King Ferdinand of Bulgaria, or any other crowned head visiting this city.

In other words, M. Durand, the successor to the famous Xavier Paoli, who protected every crowned head of Europe, has been told off to look after the safety of the American king of finance. This is the official protection accorded to royalty and the chiefs of states.

Mr. Morgan did not ask this extraordinary protection and probably does not know that he is getting it. The theory is that it was suggested by his former partner, Robert L. Bacon, who has announced his retirement as American ambassador to France. That Ambassador Bacon mentioned to his friend M. Mollard, the official master of ceremonies, the pending arrival of J. Pierpont Morgan and M. Mollard promptly gave the order to have his moneyed majesty protected like any other king.

Two Ambassadorial Discards.

Whatever the explanation may be the official protector of kings will have a squad of detectives under his command. The official protector's instructions are that they must not let Mr. Morgan know he is being protected, but to protect him at all hazards and at all times.

Much surprise was caused last evening by the appearance at the notorious Bal Tabarin of two people in uniforms worn by the American ambassadors at the Courts of Berlin and St. Petersburg. The Bal Tabarin is situated on the heights of Montmartre and is noted for its Andalusian troop of Spanish dancers, eccentric quadrilles and frolicsome youth, and is the friskiest exhibition of that frisky quarter. Some Americans who had attended diplomatic receptions at Berlin and St. Petersburg immediately recognized the American court uniform. There is no mistaking them, for once seen they are never forgotten.

Those worn at Berlin and St. Petersburg are mentioned in the same breath because they are both the same. When Charlemagne Tower was ambassador at St. Petersburg he adopted the uniform, or so it was said, for the purpose of preventing American diplomatists from being taken for waiters.

Tower Establish Custom.

In moving to Berlin he took his uniform with him and this he wore at the court of the Kaiser. Since then subsequent ambassadors have done likewise.

In London the American ambassador wears knee breeches, silk stockings and a sword. Elsewhere American diplomatists wear the ordinary evening dress.

Now the American ambassadorial uniforms seen last night at the Bal Tabarin were neither from St. Petersburg nor Berlin. Their size and proportions point to Berlin, and indicate that they might fit exactly Dr. David Jayne Hill, until recently ambassador to Germany. Dr. Hill is now living in the Avenue Antin, busily engaged writing his history of diplomacy."

The manager of the Bal Tabarin admits that the uniforms are such as are worn by the American ambassador at Berlin, that they really are American and that he bought them through an advertisement in Le Journal.

Countess Ferretti's Mistake.

Miss Mary Canfield of New York, an orphan and a beauty, has been compelled to fly from her newly wed husband, Count Ferretti of Rome. Their romance began last Spring when Miss Canfield met the good looking and ardent Roman at Bordeaux, where Miss Canfield went to rest after a severe illness.

The wooing was short and ardent, all the more so as Ferretti learned from the chaperone that Miss Canfield was immensely wealthy. They went on an automobile trip through Spain and the wooing was so rapid that on the first day they were married. The marriage took place in a hamlet outside San Sebastien. But before the honeymoon was over the trouble began. Miss Canfield would not give up more money than was necessary. Then the Count got impertinent; his impertence got on her nerves and now she has fled.

It is believed she is on her way to America. Miss Canfield lived in Paris for the past three years.

PRINCE ATTENDS DEBATE.

Kaiser's Fourth Son Delighted with "Other Classes."

BERLIN, Jan. 13.—What Prince August Wilhelm, the Kaiser's fourth son, who is studying for an administrative career, describes as a "very instructive sitting," took place recently in Berlin where two suburban municipalities debated the propriety of their malgamation with the capital. At a subsequent meeting, at which the Prince was not present, opposition suddenly sprung up to the plan, whereupon a Social Democratic councillor asked how it was that no one made any opposition when the Prince, the representative of government, was present.

A painful silence ensued, broken at last by an elderly councillor naively replying: "We didn't dare to." The amusing thing is that the Prince had written to the Burgermeister thanking him for the opportunity of becoming acquainted with "other classes of people and their characteristics."

FAVOR TWO CHINAS.

Paris Bankers See Solution of Eastern Problem.

PARIS, Jan. 13.—Financiers who suggest that an international combination of bankers might arrange some concrete plan for the settlement of the Chinese difficulty, favor the idea of the possible recognition of two Chinas, one in the north—the old monarchy—and the other in the south—the new republic. This idea finds its basis in the supposition that the struggle in the north and south is apt to continue indefinitely, plunging the country into an interminable war, destructive alike to the welfare of China and the interests of the foreign powers.

UNCLE SAM'S LIFE SAVERS AGAIN CALL ON GOVERNMENT FOR PENSIONS AND JUSTICE

Uncle Sam's army of heroes who rescue the toilers of the sea and save millions of dollars worth of property annually, the men of the Life Saving Service, have again knocked at the door of Congress this session with a petition for justice.

Warring every day in the year amid the greatest peril to their own lives to save those of others, and for the comparative pittance of $60 per month and $9 for rations, the United States government deserts them when they are broken down by their hazardous duties or by old age. No provision has ever been made to pension disabled life-savers, except through the bounty of private charity.

They call upon Congress again this year to institute two reforms:

Two Big Reforms Asked.

2—The separation of the Life Saving Service from that of the Revenue Cutter Service.

In the first case the meaning is obvious. The second may be explained as follows:

The office of district superintendent of the service is the highest rank that a life saver can attain now, yet inspectors and other officials are assigned from the Revenue Cutter service. The men of the life saving service demand that this be changed so that they may rise from the ranks and be entitled to the highest promotion, instead of having outsiders, almost of whom they say are incompetent, usurp their opportunities.

They are simply demand their rights. They only ask that they be given the same government status as the men of the Army and Navy, whose work is not so arduous or dangerous, but who are pensioned in case of disability or advancing years.

As it is now, the door of the poorhouse is practically the only one open to the crippled life saver. If disabled, he gets pay for two years. After that the nation deserts its faithful servant.

Ungrateful Uncle Sam!

Bill Stifled in the House.

At the late session of Congress the heroes of the coast came the nearest yet to having passed a bill providing pensions, introduced by the late Senator Frye. The same bill was introduced in the present Congress in the senate by Mr. Gallinger for Mr. Frye, who is dead, and in the House by Congressman Robert O. Harris of the Cape district, providing for a pension system. The champions of the measure, of whom there are many in Massachusetts, blame Congressman James Mann, former chairman of the committee on Inter-State and Foreign Commerce, for sidetracking the measure.

Mann called a morning committee hearing on the naval appropriation bill that could not be held, because the House was to session, and then spoke out clearly for the advocates of the life-saving bill to prevent it from being smothered.

They declare than Mann was working in the interest of the revenue cutter service.

President Taft was in favor of the bill. It passed the Senate, and one of its champions declared that it would have passed the House if it were given a chance by a two-thirds vote, as the delegations from most of the states were for the measure. It was stifled in the House.

The same bill has now been presented, and the friends of the life savers declare that it too will be killed this time by trick work.

Among those in Boston working for the measure is Roscoe Walsworth, a State street attorney, the same who called for the abolishment of the discriminations in the "Narrow Gauge" railroad running to Revere, Winthrop and Lynn.

The bill carries the following provisions:

A Bill to Promote the Efficiency of the Life-Saving Service.

Be it enacted by the senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

That a retired list of the following-named officers and surfmen of the life-saving service of the United States, namely, superintendents of life-saving districts, keepers of life-saving stations, and members of life-saving crews, is hereby created; such officers and surfmen placed upon the retired list shall receive seventy-five per centum of the compensation of the grade held by them at date of retirement.

Sec. 2.—That when any superintendent of a life-saving district, keeper of a life-saving station, or member of a life-saving crew in the Life-Saving Service has served thirty years in said service he may, upon the recommendation, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury, be placed on the retired list; when any superintendent of a life-saving district, keeper of a life-saving station, or member of a life-saving crew shall have sixty-four years of age he shall be placed on the retired list by the Secretary of the Treasury; and when any superintendent of a life-saving district, keeper of a life-saving station, or member of a life-saving crew has become incapacitated for the performance of the duties of his position he shall be either placed on the retired list or dropped from the service by the Secretary of the Treasury, as herein provided.

Section 3.—That the Secretary of the Treasury shall, from time to time, assemble a Life-Saving Service retiring board, composed of one superintendent of a life-saving district, one assistant inspector in the Life-Saving Service and one medical officer of the Public Health and Marine-Hospital Service, for the purpose of examining and reporting upon such officers and surfmen of the Life-Saving Service as may be ordered by the Secretary of the Treasury to appear before it, and the members of said board shall be sworn in every case to discharge their duties honestly and impartially; and such board shall inquire into and determine the facts touching the nature and occasion of the disability of any officer or surfman who appears to be incapable of performing the duties of his position, and shall have such powers as may be necessary for the purpose; and when the board finds an officer or surfman incapacitated for active service, it shall also find and report the cause which in its judgment has produced the incapacity, whether such cause is an incident of service, whether due to his own vicious habits, the infirmities of age, or physical or mental disability. The proceedings and decisions of the board shall be transmitted to the Secretary of the Treasury for his approval or disapproval.

Plan for Retirement.

Section 4.—That when the board finds that an officer or surfman is incapacitated for active service, and that his incapacity is the result of an incident of service or is due to the infirmities of age or physical or mental disability, and not to his own vicious habits, and such decision is approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, the officer or surfman shall be placed on the retired list; Provided, That no person shall receive for the same time retired pay and and extra pay provided to keepers and surfmen by Section Seven of Act approved May fourth, eighteen hundred and eighty-two. Officers and surfmen thus retired may be assigned to such duties as they may be able to perform, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury, and while employed shall receive the full pay of their respective grades.

Section 5.—That when a board finds an officer or surfman is incapacitated for active service, and that such incapacity is the result of his own vicious habits and not due to any incident of service, and its decision shall be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, the officer or surfman shall be dropped from the service.

Plan for Increases.

Section 6.—That all superintendents of life-saving districts, keepers of life-saving stations, and members of the Life-Saving Service of the United States shall receive ten per centum increase of pay for every five years of service in said Life-Saving Service, such increase to be ten per centum per centum of the pay of their rank or grade: Provided, That in computing length of service of surfmen each and every active season at stations which are not opened and manned during the entire year shall be counted as one year's service.

Section 7.—That all laws inconsistent or in conflict with the provisions of this act be, and the same are hereby repealed.

Real Economy Possible.

It is pointed out that aside from the matter of providing pensions, the separation of the Life-Saving and the Revenue Services would mean real economy to the government, and the nation could afford this were done to pay the full life savers more money.

At present the Revenue Service assigned to the life-saving branch each year draw from the life-saving appropriation $1,814. Congress also appropriates for their service $50,000, a total of $62,274. By doing away with the inspectors from the Revenue Service and letting the district superintendents, of which there are 11, do the work the inspection would cost Uncle Sam only $11,000.

The net saving, it is estimated, would be $35,814, nearly enough to pay for the pensions.

It is declared that the assignment of revenue men, of different ranks, and according to their ratings, comes pretty close to turmoil in the service. In a number of cases, and many of the revenue officers so detailed are reported to be total failures as the life-saving crews. The feeling has grown that the life-saving service is forced if the system is continued. Only recently the keeper of one of the New England stations ordered the lamplighter to get out of his station.

Superintendents Hampered.

Under the present regime it is cited that the district superintendents are badly hampered in their work by having too much to attend to, and that there should be more superintendents instead of relying on side inspectors. When a superintendent has to visit other stations than his own, all clerical work has to be held up until he returns, even the pay of his men being stopped until he returns to sign their orders.

Of the amount paid the revenue inspectors, the fourteen average about $3,000 a year. One retired revenue captain, through his rank, draws about $4,000 a year.

It is further asserted that through lack of knowledge of the practical side of saving lives, these inspectors waste the nation's money by imprudent recommendations for expenditures. For instance, a lifeboat may be recommended that cannot be practicable, and the guards of the coast may be actually prevented from rescuing wrecked sailors. The men themselves, through experience and knowledge of the sea and its tempests, know best what they should use.

DISCUSS MATTER OF PHYSICAL EDUCATION

Representatives of the Boston Social Union Meet in Roxbury.

Fifty or more representatives of the Boston Social Union met last Tuesday morning at the Roxbury Neighborhood House to discuss physical education and athletics as carried on in numerous gymnasiums and on private playgrounds throughout the city.

* * *

Charles A. Dickenson of the Ruggles Street Neighborhood House described and compared the German, Swedish and American system of physical training. Other speakers were Miss Margaret L. Burridge, Miss Robinovitz, Miss Julia Hunnewell and Fred Schenk, who took up various phases of this subject, on which many sentiments are exhilarating.

* * *

The Lincoln House has a large and well-equipped gymnasium occupying the top floor of the building. Under the direction of Fred Schenk class drill, athletic games and contests are daily features. There is a bowling alley in the basement and a play garden on the roof for outdoor recreation.

* * *

At 3 o'clock this afternoon Henry Abrahams will give a lecture in the Lincoln House Hall on "Labor Unions and Manual Training." This is the second in a course of eight lectures given Sunday afternoons.

* * *

The Dorchester Neighborhood House is fortunate in having the use of a large vacant lot which is used at all times of the year for organized play under the direction of Miss Abbott, who has had extensive training in the direction of recreation.

* * *

* * *

The directors of the Roxbury Neighborhood House on Lambert street believe strongly in stiff gymnasic drill. Miss Hunnewell, who has directed classes in the large gymnasium for six years, says the girls always enjoy such exercises.

* * *

In the Literary Club House, No. 18 Hull street, a specialty is made of folk dancing. Why Not Hiss as Well as Applaud? Something in This Timely Suggestion, After All.

By FREDERICK JOHNS.

PROFESSOR BAKER of Harvard is alleged to have advised people who do not like a theatrical or operatic performance to hiss. All the New York theatrical managers have hastened to record themselves against hissing, with humorous unanimity.

Nevertheless, Professor Baker is very right. The man who can be induced to part with good money upon representations of the excelling character of what is going on inside should have as much right to express disapproval as approval.

I really think that hissing would do more to elevate the stage musical and dramatic than all the drama leagues ever invented. At present bad singers, bad actors and bad productions get by because the part of the audience which disapproves must sit in polite silence while a paid band of hand clappers pretend to be enjoying the performance.

This immunity from immediate retribution makes managers bold. At the opera it sometimes results in the putting forward of wretched singers because the audience is sure to endure it even if it doesn't like it.

In Europe hissing at the opera is as proper as clapping. When a singer is bad they hiss and sometimes the enthusiasts in the gallery throw things. Very brutal, of course, but it prevents that singer from being foisted on an unwilling public a second time. It makes the managers very careful to present their singers' merits when they can foretell what will happen to weak ones.

I saw a performance of a Viennese opera comique in Boston last season in a 22 theatre. It was a delightful operetta, but there wasn't a single person in the cast who knew how to sing, and only one had a passable voice.

Large audiences were attracted to that theatre by the fame of the opera, and sat in silent disgust during the murder of the various musical numbers by incompetent artists. The opera was well mounted and was in itself a big drawing card. If the audience, by hissing, nipping up choice and hurling them at the stage, and in other ways had expressed its distaste for a poor performance, what do you suppose would have happened?

The management would have hastened to replace the poor singers with good ones, rather than send the news to the store house, and other audiences would not have been so confused.

As it was, they were permitted to do business for some weeks, and probably put in a prosperous season.

When a man pays five dollars to hear an opera, he is entitled to five dollars' worth of entertainment. If he doesn't get it he is entitled to protest, just much as he is by applause.

Hissing is not a more disagreeable sound than the clapping of hands. Performances at the Boston opera are usually worth five dollars and frequently worth more. They are almost always artistic, superbly mounted and well cast.

Once in a while, however, a bad singer gets into a cast and the audience is to remain because the audience suffers in silence. Otherwise the manager would convince Mr. Russell more quickly than anything else that the artist was not giving satisfaction.

Since hissing is not likely to be permitted at the Opera House, the audience should be defended from the claque. There is no official claque at the Boston Opera, but some artists go out and hire a few ruffians, buy their seats and pledge them to evince uncontrollable delight at the right moment.

Not long ago a woman singer appeared in a new role. She sang her first aria very nicely, but when the last note died away, and while the audience sat unmoved, half a dozen gentlemen in the balcony and two seated near me broke into strenuous applause. It was so palpably clear that it caused a ripple of laughter, and the audience did not participate in it at all.

* * *

"One of the most delightful and heart cheering opera performances at the Boston Opera House was the fairy tale opera 'Hansel and Gretel' last year. It was a relief and a joy of sunshine and peace after a reign of terror.

"This is no reflection on Mr. Russell's artistic offerings. He certainly must be highly credited for what he has given us, but these are many who prefer the brighter things in life and like to go even to an opera for the purpose of being elevated into a happier frame of mind after daily toil and labor, instead of reading at an endless slaughter of beloved heroes and heroines.

"All of us prefer the cheerful events with happy endings to those that end in death in its various forms—from consumption, fire, mental agony to military executions, etc.

"The operatic stage has given much delight in works such as the fairy tale of 'Hansel and Gretel,' 'Puille's Lebetane,' Wolf-Ferrari's 'Inquisitive Women,' and others where even death loses its horror, as in 'Le Jongleur de Notre Dame,' etc., not to forget the older 'Bartered Bride,' 'Von Tirol,' 'Falstaff,' 'Freischutz' and 'Griselidis.'

"Do our hero tenors and prima donnas, our villain baritones and father basses prefer to leave a scene of gayety or domestic bliss rather than their own deathbed or the executions of their operatic relations at the end of their day's work?

"This is a most interesting question, and perhaps one of our much-interviewed operatic stars is willing to answer it.

"No doubt the daily stunt of dying and assisting at tragic deaths must have an effect on the good nature of the most valiant hero, according to the saying, 'We are the result of our surroundings.'

* * *

"For the sake of making things a little more cheerful—Mr. Russell, kindly do not kill your heroes nightly, but sometimes let them live so that when coming from opera we shall once in a while feel different as if coming from a funeral. Many operas without the tragic ending would make us feel happy if put up for the sake of diversion from death and horror.

"Why not dig down into the works of beloved masters where we find such charming operas as the 'Barber of Seville,' the 'Impresario' and such humorous opera, 'The Meistersingers of Nuremberg.' Gosling's 'Cricket on the Hearth,' the closing scene of the latter sending us off with the happy thought that we have left comedy in domestic bliss.

"Why not do the 'Magic Flute' with Tamino and Pamino, and the jester, Papageno, successfully assisting the wife Queen of the Night? There are many more grand, musical and colorful works aside of the modern composers' grewsome tragedies."

* * *

Most of Mr. Burgstaller's examples of happy operas are unfortunately not so well calculated to attract the public as the murderous ones, for the modern composers were so considerate as to fit glorious music to them.

He is a German and naturally offers as examples German masterpieces. The Boston Opera is not equipped to do such works fully, but with a little patience, Mr. Burgstaller, these good things will come in time. Console yourself with "Mignon" and "The Girl of the Golden West," which sing happily; "Hansel and Gretel," "The Barber of Seville" and "Secret of Suzanne," "L'Enfant Prodigue," and "Don Pasquale," all of which we are going to hear during the season.

We are not as badly off after all. Neither are we going to have the fairy opera, "Forst Bleue," which ends happily comic. Go to, Mr. Burgstaller. What you want are not happy operas, but German operas, and they will come in time.

HOFMANN'S RECITAL.

Last Appearance This Year of the Brilliant Pianist Next Saturday.

The last opportunity to hear Josef Hofmann this year in Boston and the only opportunity of the season to hear him in recital will come next Saturday afternoon, when he gives a recital in Symphony Hall at 2:30. Hofmann this year is giving three recitals in America, one in Boston, one in New York and one in Chicago, these being his only appearances besides those with the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

He has arranged a most comprehensive program for his recital next week, which contains several compositions that have at least the savor of novelty. His first group will be devoted to Beethoven, comprising the Sonata, Op. 110; "Ronde a Capriccio," "Andante Favori" and the March from "The Ruins of Athens" which was transcribed by Rubinstein. The second group on the program will be Chopin—"Barcarolle," Nocturne in C Minor, Nocturne in D-Flat Major, F Major and G-Flat Major.

Modern music comprises the last group, Scriabine, Sgambati, Debussy's "Soiree Grenade" and three pieces by Rachmaninoff, "Polichinelle," Prelude in F-Sharp Minor and Prelude in G Minor.

ANTON WITEK TO PLAY.

Concert Master of Symphony Orchestra Will Be Soloist.

One of the most memorable features of the Symphony season of 1910-1911 was the debut as soloist of Anton Witek, concert master of the orchestra when he played the Beethoven concerto. It was generally agreed that few finer performances of this master work had been heard in Boston, and the coming week at the thirteenth public rehearsal and concert, Mr. Witek will again be soloist and this year he has elected to play the Brahms's Concerto.

Three years ago Mr. Fiedler placed Gustav Strube's Symphony in B Minor on a program, and it will again be played the coming week. The program as it stands is Strube's Symphony in B Minor, Brahms's Concerto for Violin in D Major and Beethoven's "Fidelio" overture.

DRAMATIC ABILITY MADE MISS SWARTZ

By FREDERICK JOHNS.

The other day when passing by a new apartment building which has been erected on our Huntington avenue very close at the Opera House, I saw a To Let sign in the window of one of the front apartments.

Yesterday day To Let sign was gone, but instead, coming down the front steps with an air of proprietorship, was Miss Jeska Swartz.

"Are you the owner of the building?" I asked her, because opera singers receive large salaries and frequently they walk out and purchase hotels and apartment houses just like that.

"No, but I own the sweetest little apartment you ever saw in your life," replied Miss Swartz, who is a fervent and superlative young person. "I've just moved in. Come in and see me."

"Not on your life," I replied, moving rapidly in the direction of the car tracks.

"Why not?"

"Because I have been invited to call on ladies who had just moved in and been put in work."

"Oh, my work is all done."

"Carpets down?"

"Don't use carpets. Rugs."

"Pictures all hung?"

"Every one."

"Boxes and trunks all unpacked?"

"Every one."

So She Sat on Steps.

"Very well," said Miss Swartz, and she sat down on the steps. "Proceed."

"How old are you?"

"None of your business!"

"Oh, that's different; nineteen."

"Are you fond of music?"

"When I am allowed to sing it. As other times I hate it."

"Why are you a grand opera singer?"

Miss Swartz's eyes sparkled. Did I tell you she had brown eyes? Oh, yes. Large brown eyes. Virgil and Huger and some of those classic poets when they wanted to compliment a lady with brown eyes said she had eyes like a cow. If I said that about Miss Swartz, I fear the compliment, not just the same cows have very beautiful, large, limpid brown eyes.

"I'm in grand opera singer," said Miss Swartz, "first of all because I have a good voice and singing is my specialty. But next to the finest thing a singer can do, is dramatic. I love to act and in opera one gets a chance to act as well as sing.

Acting Counts More and More.

"My conception of grand opera is that acting is going to count more and more as the years go on. Those of us who are not gifted with such phenomenal voices that it doesn't matter whether we act or not must set ourselves to do fine things dramatically. If I were a soprano I should love to sing Melisande. Or, for example, it is a wonderful role, and what an opportunity for an actress!"

Miss Swartz is a mezzo-soprano, or, more properly, a contralto, and she has already made a reputation by her dramatic ability. For example, the first time they gave "Madame Butterfly" they imported a first contralto of some reputation from the Metropolitan Opera. Next time they let Miss Swartz sing Suzuki, the maid of Butterfly, and she put it all over the imported one, not only histrionically, but vocally. There have been no Suzukis for Jeska since.

She has had equal success in other roles. When the part calls for fights, Miss Swartz will wear them, and when it calls for a gray wig and a bent back, she delivers them. A regulation opera singer would create a disturbance at unpleasant parts and make up young for the old women roles so that the audience could see it was a great singer compelled by the exigencies of her voice to sing such things, but actually very young and pretty.

Just because she is artistic, Miss Swartz has been getting big parts, and now she is going to create Hop on My Thumb in "Le Feerf Heros," which is practically leading role, and sing Hansel in "Hansel and Gretal."

But we digress, and Jeska is sitting on the cold stone steps.

"I have sung very much in concerts," she was saying, "but most of all I love opera, and really, to be a success in concert nowadays you must first get a big reputation in opera."

Miss Swartz was so genial and good natured that I ventured a question which has been much mooted around the Opera House. It was about her costume as the Greek Slave in "Thais." It was rather a difficult question to phrase properly so that it would be at once respectful and direct.

"Would you mind telling me," I demanded.

"Well."

"Your costume in "Thais." Did something break or was it intended so?"

Miss Swartz smiled and was about to speak.

Suddenly a harsh janitorial voice interrupted us.

"Do you think this is a South End boarding house that you should be sitting on the steps blocking up the passage way?"

"I must go," said Miss Swartz and hastened within. I wonder if she will ever answer that question.

NEW PRIMA-DONNA FOR OPERA HOUSE

Yvonne de Freville to Appear as Gilda in "Rigoletta" To-morrow Night.

The coming week at the Boston Opera House will be marked by the introduction of still another coloratura soprano new to Boston opera-goers, for on Monday evening Yvonne de Freville, a young American soprano who has won a sensational success abroad, is to cling the role of Gilda in Verdi's "Rigoletto."

Miss de Treville was born in the United States of a French father and an American mother. She made her debut at the Paris Opera Comique, in the title role of Lakme, with great success. Then followed similar triumphs at the Stockholm Royal Opera, Copenhagen and St. Petersburg Symphony concerts and the Khedivial Opera at Cairo, St. Petersburg Imperial Opera, Bucharest National Opera, Nice Opera, Municipal, Nice Casino Municipal, Brussels, Theatre de la Monnaie; Budapest, Royal Opera; Vienna Royal Opera and Budapest Royal Opera. Her best roles are considered to be Lakme, Rosina in "Barber of Seville," Gilda in "Rigoletto," Juliette in "Hamlet," "Miguon," "Traviata," and Mimi in "Boheme."

Mlle. de Treville is a remarkable linguist as she sings with equal ease in French, English, Italian, German, Russian, Hungarian, Swedish, Danish and Russian.

This will be Mlle. de Treville's only appearance in Boston.

The performance of "Rigoletto" which will take place on Monday evening will bring with it another opportunity to hear Florence Constantino in the role of the Duke, a role which no other tenor of the present day can sing as well as the handsome Spaniard. The Rigoletto of the cast will be Giovanni Polese, while Spanfucile will be in the hands of Jose Mardones. Cesti will conduct.

On Wednesday evening Puccini's "The Girl of the Golden West" will be presented for the first time this season with the same excellent cast that made this opera familiar to Boston last season, only that Giovanni Zenatello will essay for the first time the role of Johnson and Edward Lankow will be heard in that of Ashby. Another change worthy of note will be in the fact that Hestert Mouranzoni will conduct this opera.

On Friday evening "Pelleas et Melisande" will be presented with the same cast as on the previous occasion and Andre-Caplet in the conductor's chair.

On Saturday matinee will be devoted to Verdi's "La Traviata" with the incomparable Tetrazzini in the part of Violetta. The ensemble promises a great deal of enjoyment as Zenatello is to be the Alfred Germont and Polese the Giorgio Germont. Cesti will conduct.

On Friday evening "Pelleas et Melisande" will be presented with the same cast as on the previous occasion and Andre-Caplet in the conductor's chair.

On Saturday evening popular performance will bring forward Elizabeth Amsden as a full-fledged prima donna, for she is to sing the title role of Verdi's "Aida." Miss Amsden, who has appeared so far only in the Sunday night concerts, gives promise of proving a real sensation. The Redames of the cast will be Florencio Constantino, a role in which he has yet sung in Boston this year. When it is remembered that he is the idol of the Ramfis and Ramon Blanchart the Amonasro with Clarasene and Amneris all that we seek the excellence of the cast gives promise of an evening of thorough enjoyment. Moranzoni will conduct.

The sale of tickets for the first of the two concerts to be given in Symphony Hall by the Cecilia Society on Thursday evening, January 25, will open at the box office of Symphony Hall next Friday morning. As already announced, the Cecilia gives only one choral work with orchestra this year, and this is at the first concert, when Berlioz' "The Damnation of Faust" will be sung. At the second concert, in March, the program will comprise a Capella choruses with groups of songs by Madame Emma Eames and Emilio de Gogorza.

"The Damnation of Faust" is one of the few works dating from the middle of the last century which shows few, if any signs of wear. In many respects it must be regarded as Berlioz's highest achievement in music, and it probably has more performances in the course of a year than any other choral work, with the exception of Handel's "Messiah."

Mr. Arthur Mees, the new conductor of the Cecilia, has conducted "The Damnation of Faust" many times in many cities, and thus is thoroughly familiar with it. Much is expected of the chorus under the new regime, for Mr. Mees has succeeded in filling its membership with an enthusiasm which, in recent years has been notable chiefly by its absence. Rehearsals have been well attended and a considerable increase in membership has been noted.

The chorus will have the assistance of an orchestra composed of Symphony players ample in size for the work involved. Much interest surrounds the appearance of Miss Alice Nielsen in this, for her, new field. She will sing the part of Marguerite. It is only recently that she has been branching out in concert work and this will practically be her debut in choral concert of large dimension. Miss Nielsen is open has sung both Gounod's Marguerite and Boito's Marguerite.

Galvin's Article on Ireland

Two Great Defenders of Home Rule

Both Have Served in Dublin Castle

Morley and Birrell Champion Self - Government, Long Sought by Irish People.

By C. O'CONNELL GALVIN.

As the time draws nearer for the introduction by Premier Asquith of the long-awaited bill to grant home rule to Ireland two statesmen of England—besides the Prime Minister—will occupy a leading place in the world interest that shall surround the scene.

It will be nothing new for John Morley or for Augustine Birrell to find themselves in an atmosphere redolent with peace and good will toward Ireland. They have both been breathing that air for thirty years and the period of acclimation has long since passed.

Both these men have played strong parts in the cause of justice to Ireland, ever since their mighty leader, Mr. Gladstone, espoused it and made the cause his own six and twenty years ago. And both have been true to the gospel since, through storm and calm, through days of gloom as through those of strength and hope. Not one hour of wavering or thought of compromise have they ever indulged. They have stood firm and steadfast as the stars for the cause of justice to a long wronged nation. And through them, Gladstone's spirit of fair play to Ireland dominates the public life and opinion of England to-day, even, though the Great Commoner himself has long since lain in the tomb.

"Castle" System Must Go.

It is good to hear John Morley or Mr. Birrell speak about Ireland, either in Parliament or from the platform at some great meeting.

Not a parase of cant or hypocrisy or a suggestion of condescension or patronage mars the deliverance of either in dealing with the question of Ireland. Every word they utter is born of sincerity. Every argument they adduce has truth and honesty as its dominating notes. Political expediency plays no part whatever in their advocacy of a cause of whose justice they are as certain as they are of their own existence.

Both men have lived in Ireland, filling the office of Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant or Viceroy. This experience was all they needed to make them ardent home rulers for the rest of their lives.

As each in his turn came daily into contact with the infamies of Dublin Castle and peered into the secrets of official tyranny and corruption which ran their poisonous course through every section of the country, carrying a pestilence of national immorality everywhere they stenched, both Morley and Birrell vowed they would clear Ireland so far as they were able of the source of all such foulness.

Both statesmen saw the only way to do this was to substitute a national parliament, pure and democratic, for the "castle" system, the worst of its kind civilization has ever known. And so it was that John Morley and Augustine Birrell came to nail their colors to the mast in the cause of self-government for Ireland.

Throughout the long line of chief secretaries by whom Ireland has been ruled since 1800, the year of the act of the union, the names are but few that command the respect of the Irish people. Charles James Fox was the first honest Englishman to sound a note of protest against what he saw going on in Ireland. His words of protest and of solemn warning fell on unwelcoming ears in London and he was peremptorily recalled.

Dare to Tell the Truth.

There were three others, honest men, who, like Fox, were not afraid to "tell the truth and shame the devil" about the wantonness and rottenness of Dublin Castle. They were James Bryce, John Morley and Augustine Birrell.

Mr. Bryce's official stay in Ireland was too short to afford opportunity for much practical reform, and his entrance into diplomacy has, of course, taken him out of the political arena altogether.

But Morley and Birrell have never left the scene of action and, in reward for their fidelity they will be known in future history as the greatest of the English secretaries for Ireland.

Both Lord Morley and Mr. Birrell are admirably equipped for the task with which they are soon to be confronted as defenders of the home rule policy of their Prime Minister.

Literary men of highest rank, they are not only students of history, but facile and prolific writers of it. And he needs be bold indeed who dares in either of the houses of Parliament to attack the measure for which Prime Minister Asquith and his brother ministers will soon be responsible before the country.

John Morley—since 1908 he has been Lord Morley of Blackburn—was forty-five when, in 1883, Mr. Gladstone induced him to enter Parliament. He contested one of the seats for the city of Newcastle-on-Tyne and, stranger as he was to the voters, was returned by a large majority over his Tory opponent. He sat for Newcastle from

FOR HOME RULE

AUGUSTINE BIRRELL

JOHN MORLEY

1883 till 1895. He then contested Montrose as the Liberal standard-bearer, was elected and sat for this district until 1908, when, yielding reluctantly to the advice of his friends and his party leaders, he accepted the rank of viscount and entered the, to him, uncongenial House of Lords, where he has since been the Liberal leader.

Prior to 1883 Mr. Morley was a hard worker in the journalism of London. He became great as an editor when he took charge of the Pall Mall Gazette, a penny afternoon paper, printed in London, and which under Morley's influence and personality speedily became one of the most powerful newspapers, socially and politically, in all England. Mr. Morley liked to gather around him as fellow workers at the editorial table, men of force and individuality, thinkers and, of course, able writers. Two of those workers under Morley became themselves in a very few years powerful leaders in English politics, and that on the English side of St. George's Channel Ireland had no truer or warmer friend.

Despite the exactions of his busy life as an editor and a political leader, which he speedily became as soon as he "struck into his stride" in the House of Commons, Mr. Morley has given to the world of letters many rich contributions. He has written three "lives," those of William Ewart Gladstone, Richard Cobden and Edmund Burke. His "Gladstone" is the monumental work of Morley's whole career. He has also written the lives of Voltaire and of Oliver Cromwell.

I saw Viscount Morley last June in his place in the House of Lords. And I was pained to notice how severely hard work, the night hours of parliamentary life and, of course, Old Father Time, had dealt with the John Morley I had seen twenty years before. His voice weak, his face haggard and fallen, his eyes aged. But the great intellect was burning as brightly as in the old days and the John Morley of a score of years before came back in all his splendid aggressiveness and fiery honesty as he rose that afternoon and made reply to Lord Lansdowne, the Tory leader, who had just made a bitter attack on the government's Irish policy.

The pitiless logic, the burning invective, the appeal for justice, were all there, grand and powerful as ever. But the fine voice had all but gone and the men in the press gallery had difficulty in catching some of his most important sentences.

Wielded Strong Influence for Cause of Ireland During Their Terms.

It is good to know, however, that Morley sits no longer in the House of Lords, as a Liberal leader, helpless, outnumbered, impotent as a promoter of his party's policies.

The fangs of the Tory hereditary majority have been drawn. Henceforward, and for all time, the Lords' power of arrogant rejection of Liberal measures is diminished and limited. The hereditary ones may fume and roar and vote down Morley and those with him to their heart's content. But only twice can their brute force prevail. The third time the John Morleys have their innings and then the wearers of coronets, whose birth was with a golden spoon, will sit in baffled helplessness while the bill they hate is enacted into law despite their yells of protest.

And for this mighty change may the God of Battles and of Nations be most profoundly thanked.

A great colleague for Premier Asquith and Lord Morley in the coming battle will be Augustus Birrell, the present Irish Chief Secretary. Indeed, the brunt of the fight will fall to Mr. Birrell, as being the minister directly responsible for the government of Ireland; he will in all probability be the "minister in charge" of the Home Rule Bill.

In the English Parliament every cabinet measure of first importance has a minister in charge. He is obliged to be in his place day after day and night after night through all the stages of the bill's passage in the House of Commons to defend the measure against the attacks of the opposition. In fact, he is the leader of the House while that particular bill is in progress.

Home Rule Foes Active.

The Tory leaders have already made open declaration of their intention to fight, not only every clause, but every line of the Home Rule bill. Every cunning artifice known to the skilled parliamentary tactician will be quet to the limit to gain time and delay the passage of the bill.

Bonar Law, the new Tory leader—successor of Arthur Balfour, whom the "no surrender" young bloods of his party have elbowed aside—is an able fighter, one of those "horse, foot and dragoons" dashers to victory or death whose prison knows no such word as compromise. Law has pledged himself to kill home rule. Nothing short of death for the measure will satisfy him, and he has for months been laying plans for a relentless anti-home rule campaign, both in Parliament and outside.

And so it will come to pass that from the day Mr. Asquith brings his bill before the House of Commons from that hour onwards Secretary Birrell will be face to face with the most bitter struggle of his whole career.

Equipped for Debate.

Not only mentally, but physically, the stress on him will be terrible. Mr. Birrell is now two years past his sixtieth birth day and for a man of those years, no matter how great his enthusiasm or devotion to duty may be, to take part day by day for several weeks in a contest that is sure to be marked by passion and angry feeling, is to impose a task upon oneself from which many men might shrink and lose no prestige for doing so.

Mr. Birrell is, fortunately, a man of strong constitution. He has lived well and he has a fine impelling and sustaining force, in his heartfelt attachment to the home rule cause. He is a splendid debater. No man in British public life can excel him in his grasp of every feature of the Irish question. And the gentlemen on the other side who attempt to "draw" him will be careful to heed well their facts before they go into the combat.

Mr. Birrell was born at Wavertree, a suburb of Liverpool, in 1850. His father was a Non-Conformist minister. After a brilliant career at Amersham Hall School, near Reading, and at Trinity College, Cambridge, he was called to the bar in 1875. Despite the fact that he is a lawyer, he has devoted his life to literature and to politics. He has sat in Parliament for West Fife, in Scotland, from 1889 to 1900. Since 1906 he has been a member for Bristol, for which city the famous Edmund Burke was a member in the days of the American Revolution.

Speaking one afternoon last Summer with Mr. Birrell on the terrace of the House of Parliament, overlooking the Thames, I alluded to the first time I saw him, away back in 1886. It was at the great Liberal meeting in Liverpool at which Mr. Gladstone was the chief speaker, when he announced to the country in a magnificent oration his decision to lead as chief of the Liberal party a propaganda for home rule for Ireland.

Urges Justice to Ireland.

With Mr. Gladstone that day on the platform was the Rev. Henry Ward Beecher of Brooklyn, and next to him sat Mr. Birrell, now chief secretary for Ireland.

When I recalled this meeting to Secretary Birrell and the fact of his sitting next to Dr. Beecher that day, he was as delighted as he was surprised.

"My, my," he said, "you're perfectly right. I remember the day distinctly."

And then for a few minutes we talked about that great meeting and the wonderful speech of Mr. Gladstone in which he moved many to tears as he eloquently pleaded for Ireland.

That speech made Augustine Birrell a home ruler. In the years that have since passed Ireland has had no stauncher friend than he. Twice he lost his seat in Parliament because of his outspoken defence of the Irish members and the cause they stand for. But he never surrendered one jot of his convictions.

The other day he spoke at an immense gathering at Bristol and in his speech he used one sentence that is worth repeating. He was talking of the governmeat policy on home rule. He said:

"It is our duty to spare no effort in finding out what is just to Ireland and once we find that let us be generous."
